CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FORTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FORTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS.

FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 3, 1883.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress commenced this day.

The Senators assembled in the Senate Chamber in the Capitol, at Washington City.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont) took the chair and called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock, noon.

PRAYER.

Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray. Our Father in heaven, we adore Thee as the King eternal, immortal, and invisible, the only true and living God, the Father of all our mercies, and the Supreme Governor of the universe. We thank Thee for all the goodness and mercy with which Thou hast crowned our past lives, and we pray that Thou wouldst continue to bless us as Thou seest we need. May we never, by our ingratitude and disobedience, forfeit Thy favor, which is life, and Thy loving kindness, which is better than life, but may we long live a united, happy, and prosperous people, a people who fear God and who love righteousness. Defend and deliver us from all evil, from ignorance and superstition, from infidelity and licentiousness, from internal strife and from foreign aggression.

Bless our rulers, the President of the United States and the Senators and Representatives in Congress, and all others in authority. May they be plenteously endowed with wisdom and grace from on high to guide and assist them in the discharge of their responsible duties. We invoke Thine especial blessing upon this Senate. May the members of this body illustrate in their lives the virtues and graces which should adorn those who occupy their exalted position.

We would offer up a special prayer for those members of this body who are absent by reason of sickness. May it please Thee speedily to restore them to health.

Most merciful God, we implore Thy grace and the forgiveness of all our sins. Be with us in all the trials and changes of life, sustain and comfort us in the hour of death, and finally receive us all into Thy heavenly kingdom, we ask for Christ our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

When the State of Mississippi was reached in the call,

The CLERK said: The Clerk wishes to make a statement respecting the second district of Mississippi, for which no enrollment has been made.

THE SECOND DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI.

The Clerk has not enrolled the name of any one as a Representative for the second district of Mississippi, for the reason that no paper which can be considered a certificate of election in the sense of the law has been presented to him.

Hon. James R. Chalmers, who claims to have been elected in that district, has filed with the Clerk four "exhibits" in support of his claim to be enrolled as a Representative-elect.

Exhibit A is a certified copy of the canvass made on the 18th of November, 1882, by the secretary of state of Mississippi of the votes cast in that district, which canvass gave—

	Votes.
Mr. Van H. Manning	8,749
Mr. J. R. Chalmers	8,257
Mr. H. C. Carter	129
Mr. J. R. Chambless	1,472
Scattering	1

In this canvass the county of Tate is counted as 1,166 for Mr. Manning, none for Mr. Chalmers, 3 for Mr. Carter, and 1,472 for Mr. Chambless.

Exhibit B is a certified copy of the return made November 11, 1882, by the commissioners of election for Tate County, which certifies that in that county—

	Votes.
Mr. Van H. Manning received	1,166
Mr. James R. Chalmers received	1,472
Mr. Hannibal C. Carter received	3

This return is signed by the three commissioners of election of Tate County.

On the back of it is a copy of the tally-list, which is referred to in the return as a "true and correct" tally-sheet of the votes cast for Congress by precincts, and which gives this total for that county:

	Votes.
Mr. Van H. Manning	1,166
Mr. J. R. Chambless	1,472
Mr. H. Carter	3

Exhibit C is a certified copy of another certificate signed by the same commissioners, and made on the 18th day of November, 1882, stating that the "true and correct" list of the returns of the vote in Tate County is as follows:

	Votes.
Mr. Van H. Manning	1,166
Mr. James R. Chalmers	1,472
Mr. H. C. Carter	3

The secretary of state, while certifying to the correctness of the transcript of the paper last referred to, states that it reached his office November 21, 1882, and that he does not regard or recognize it as constituting any part of the official papers or documents in his office.

Exhibit D is an affidavit of J. M. Williams to the effect that, as one of the clerks of the commissioners of election, he made out the tally-sheet first referred to, and he swears that there was no vote returned for J. R. Chambless, and that he intended to make out the tally of said vote for J. R. Chalmers; that he still believes that he wrote J. R. Chalmers and not J. R. Chambless on said tally-sheet; but if mistaken in this, he swears that it was a clerical error on his part, and that the vote returned on said tally-sheet was in fact and truth cast and returned for J. R. Chalmers.

These papers, separately considered, show that there was a clerical error in the tally-list accompanying the return of the commissioners of Tate County, made November 11, 1882, in that the recitals of the return and of the tally-list differ as to the name of the person who received the 1,472 votes in question; and that on the 18th of November, 1882, the same commissioners of election sent another paper, which corrected the tally-list as to this fact, and made its recital of name harmonize with that of the return, which correction of error, however, reached the office of the secretary of state November 21, 1882, or three days after said officer had made his canvass, as appears from Exhibit A, duly certified by himself.

Whatever may be the judgment upon the facts hereby revealed, these papers, taken singly or together, afford the Clerk of the House no sufficient ground for the enrollment of Mr. Chalmers as a Representative-elect, because they do not form a compliance with the plain requirements of the law.

If the governor of Mississippi issued a certificate of election to any one, based upon the canvass made by the secretary of state on the 18th of November, 1882, for the second district, it has not been presented to the Clerk, who submits to the House the papers in his possession, with his reasons for having failed to enroll any one.

FIRST DISTRICT OF NORTH CAROLINA.

When the first district of North Carolina was reached—

The CLERK said: With regard to the first district of North Carolina, the Clerk has information that Mr. Walter R. Pool, who was elected at the November election of 1882 to represent it, died on the 25th of August, 1883. No certificate of the election of a successor has been filed with the Clerk.

SEVENTH DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

When the seventh district of Virginia was reached in the call—

The CLERK said: The Clerk advises the House, respecting the seventh district of Virginia, that Hon. John Paul, elected to represent it, resigned his office, to take effect September 5, 1883.

The following members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. HAMMOND of Georgia, Mr. MCCOID of Iowa, Mr. HASKELL of Kansas, Mr. ROBERTSON of Kentucky, Mr. WHITE of Minnesota, and Mr. CLARDY of Missouri.

The CLERK. Three hundred and seventeen members have answered to their names—more than a quorum.

LIST OF CHANGES SINCE THE ELECTION.

The CLERK. Of interest to members and as a matter of permanent record the Clerk presents in tabulated form the changes in the list of members since the election of the Forty-eighth Congress, and requests it be incorporated in the RECORD. It is as follows:

List of changes since the election of Forty-eighth House of Representatives.

First Alabama	Thomas H. Herndon*	March 28, 1883	James T. Jones.

*Died. †Resigned.

ADMISSION TO THE HALL.

Mr COX, of New York. Mr. Clerk, I desire to present a motion as a matter of courtesy and at the request of many members of the House around me. I ask consent to move that admission to the lobbies and to the floor of the House in rear of the seats be accorded to the families of members and other ladies accompanying them during to-day. The corridors around the Hall are thronged and crowded to their utmost capacity, and the ladies connected with the families of members are unable to gain an entrance. I submit the motion hoping that it will be adopted as an act of simple courtesy to these ladies, and I believe it is not unusual to present such a motion pending the organization of the House.

The CLERK. The gentleman from New York submits a motion that the doors of the Hall be opened for the admission of the families of members in order that they may occupy the space in the rear of the seats.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for a division.

The CLERK. The Clerk will state to the gentleman from New York that this motion is entertained only by unanimous consent.

Several members objected.

Mr. COX, of New York. I did not believe that any member present would object to the motion, but since objection has been made I withdraw it.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Clerk, I desire to submit a motion that the executive gallery be opened for the admission of the families of members.

The motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER.

The CLERK. The Clerk is now ready to receive nominations for the office of Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Clerk, I nominate for the Speaker of this House for the Forty-eighth Congress Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative-elect from the State of Kentucky, a man of acknowledged pre-eminent qualifications for the office.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Clerk, I nominate for Speaker of this House Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER, a Representative-elect from the State of Ohio.

The CLERK. If there are no further nominations, the House will proceed to the election of a Speaker. The names of the members will be called.

Mr. LYMAN. I nominate for Speaker Mr. GEORGE D. ROBINSON, a member-elect from the State of Massachusetts.

The CLERK. No further nominations being made, the Clerk will request Mr. MORRISON of Illinois, Mr. TUCKER of Virginia, Mr. REED of Maine, and Mr. CALKINS of Indiana to act as tellers for the election of Speaker.

The tellers took their places at the Clerk's desk.

The CLERK. The rules of the House provide that the vote for Speaker shall be viva voce. The roll will be called and members will respond to their names by announcing their choice for Speaker.

The roll was called, with the following result:

For Mr. John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky—190.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Clerk, on behalf of the tellers appointed to canvass the vote for Speaker, I am directed to report that the tellers have agreed in their tally and the result is as follows:

Whole number of votes cast, 308. Of this number Mr. CARLISLE has received 190 votes; Mr. KEIFER 113 votes; Mr. ROBINSON of Massachusetts, 2 votes; and Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. JOHN S. WISE, and Mr. LACEY, 1 vote each.

The CLERK. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], on behalf of the tellers appointed to canvass the vote for Speaker, reports that they have agreed in their tally, and that the whole number of votes cast is 308. The number necessary to a choice is 155. Of the total number of votes cast, Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE, a member-elect from the State of Kentucky, has received 190 votes; Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER received 113 votes; Hon. GEORGE D. ROBINSON, 2 votes; Hon. J. W. WADSWORTH, 1 vote; Hon. E. S. LACEY, 1 vote, and Hon. JOHN S. WISE, 1 vote. Mr. CARLISLE having received 190 votes is hereby declared the duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Forty-eighth Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL and Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER will please escort the Speaker-elect to the chair.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. KEIFER conducted Mr. CARLISLE to the chair, when the Speaker-elect addressed the House as follows:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives: I thank you sincerely for the high honor conferred upon me by the vote just taken. To be chosen from the membership of a great body like this to preside over its deliberations is a distinction upon which any citizen might properly congratulate himself; and I assure you that your kindness and partiality are fully appreciated. At the same time, I realize the fact that the position to which you have assigned me is one of very great labor and responsibility; and, while profoundly grateful to you for this manifestation of your confidence, I shall enter upon the discharge of its duties with a serious distrust of my capacity to meet in an acceptable manner the requirements of the office. I promise, however, to devote to your service all the zeal and all the ability of which I am possessed.

Gentlemen, the maintenance of order upon the floor is essential—absolutely essential—to the intelligent and systematic transaction of the public business, and I earnestly invoke your assistance in the enforcement of the rules adopted for the government of our proceedings. The large addition to the membership of this House resulting from the reapportionment of representation makes this duty even more difficult than it has been heretofore; and without your cordial co-operation and support I can not reasonably hope even to discharge the ordinary daily duties of this office. That you will cheerfully co-operate with me in every proper effort to preserve order, and to facilitate the business of legislation, I have no doubt. But, gentlemen, I shall ask something more of you than mere co-operation in the correct discharge of my official duties. Assuring you of my earnest desire at all times to be just and impartial, still I can not expect to avoid mistakes, and shall be compelled therefore frequently, no doubt, to rely upon the friendly forbearance of gentlemen upon both sides of the House.

I am sure, gentlemen, that all matters of legislation presented during this Congress will receive from you such careful consideration as the magnitude and character of the interests involved require, and that your action upon them will be wise, conservative, and patriotic. Sudden and radical changes in the laws and regulations affecting the commercial and industrial interests of the people ought never to be made unless imperatively demanded by some great public emergency, and in my opinion, under existing circumstances, such changes would not be favorably received by any considerable number of those who have given serious attention to the subject. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Many reforms are undoubtedly necessary, and it will be your duty, after a careful examination of the whole subject in all its bearings, to decide how far they shall extend, and when and in what manner they shall be made. If there are any who fear that your action upon this or any other subject will be actually injurious to any interest, or even afford reasonable cause for alarm, I am quite sure that they will be agreeably disappointed. [Renewed applause upon the Democratic side.]

What the country has the right to expect is strict economy in the administration of every department of the Government, just and equal taxation for public purposes, a faithful observance of the limitations of the Constitution, and a scrupulous regard for the rights and interests of the great body of the people, in order that they may be protected, so far as Congress has the power to protect them, against encroachment from every direction. Whatever can be done under the circumstances surrounding us to meet this expectation ought to be done, in my judgment.

But, gentlemen, without detaining you further, I am ready to take the oath of office prescribed by the Constitution and the laws, and proceed to complete the organization of the House.

Mr. KELLEY, having served longest continuously as a member of the House, administered to the Speaker-elect the oath prescribed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that a quorum of the Senate had assembled, and that the Senate was ready to proceed to business.

The message further announced that the Senate had appointed a committee to join such committee as might be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House had assembled and that Congress was ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make, and that Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. BAYARD had been appointed such committee on the part of the Senate.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER proceeded to administer to the members in attendance the oath of office. The members presented themselves, as their names were called by States, and took respectively the test-oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862, or the special oath provided in the act of July 11, 1868, for those whose disabilities under the fourteenth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States have been removed by a vote of two-thirds of each House of Congress.

When the State of Kansas was called,

Mr. SPRINGER said: I ask that Mr. PETERS, who claims to be sworn as a Representative at large from the State of Kansas, shall stand aside for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will stand aside for the present.

The Clerk having completed the call of the roll of members-elect for the administration of the oath of office,

The SPEAKER said: When Mr. PETERS appeared, claiming to be sworn as a Representative-elect from the State of Kansas, he was asked to stand aside for the present. Unless there be further objection the gentleman, if present, will take the oath of office.

Mr. SPRINGER. The governor of the State of Kansas has placed in my hands or forwarded to me a memorial, signed by himself and other State officers of the State of Kansas and a large number of the citizens of that State, protesting against the admission of Mr. PETERS to a seat as a member of this House, on the ground that under the constitution and laws of the State of Kansas he is ineligible to hold that office.

I will ask that this memorial be printed in the RECORD, except the names. I will also offer a resolution in reference to this subject, and after that I will withdraw my objection to the oath being administered to the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the memorial referred to by the gentleman from Illinois will be printed in the RECORD without the names.

There was no objection. The memorial, without the names, is as follows:

STATE OF KANSAS, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Topeka, November 31, 1883.

To the House of Representatives United States, Washington, D. C.:

We, State officers and members of the Democratic party of the State of Kansas, most respectfully protest against the admission of Judge S. R. Peters, of this State, to a seat in your honorable body, and protest against him being allowed to take the oath as a member of the House.

Judge S. R. Peters was elected judge of the ninth judicial district of the State of Kansas in November, 1879. His term of office commenced in January, 1880, for four years, ending January, 1884.

Section 13, article 3, of the constitution of the State of Kansas reads as follows:

"The justices of the supreme court and judges of the district court shall at stated times receive for their services such compensation as may be provided by law, which shall not be increased during their respective term of office: Provided, Such compensation shall not be less than fifteen hundred dollars to each justice or judge each year, and such justices or judges shall receive no fees or perquisites, nor hold any other office of profit or trust under the authority of the State or the United States during the term of office for which said justices and judges shall be elected, nor practice law in any of the courts in the State during their continuance in office."

This was the constitution under which Kansas was admitted into the Union, assented to by Congress in the act of admission, and is a part of the compact between the United States, and the State of Kansas.

Under this provision of our constitution, assented to by Congress, Judge S. R. Peters cannot hold a seat in your honorable body, nor can he take the oath as a member without a clear violation of our constitution. This was well known to the electors of Kansas when Judge Peters was voted for in November, 1882.

The Legislature of the State of Kansas, in the face of this election, in order to give a legislative construction to the constitution, passed without opposition the following law, approved March 8, 1883:

An act to preserve the purity of the judiciary.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas:

SECTION 1. That all ballots or votes cast at any election for any person holding the office of judge of the district court, or of justice of the supreme court, except for a judicial office, shall be deemed and held void, and shall not be counted by the judges and clerks of any election, nor by any canvassing board, nor shall any record of the same be made by any canvassing board, nor any certificate of election be issued thereon.

SEC. 2. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed and held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned in the county jail not less than three nor more than six months.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect on its publication in the statute-book.

Approved March 8, 1883.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original bill now on file in my office.

JAMES SMITH,
Secretary of State.

Had this law been passed previous to the election in 1882 the vote for S. R. Peters would not have been counted, and the next highest on the list of candidates for Representatives for Congress (Hon. S. N. Wood) would have been declared elected and have held the certificate.

This law does not in any particular change the constitution, but does, in fact, put a legislative construction on it, under which Judge Peters is not entitled to his seat.

Mr. SPRINGER. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the memorial of the governor of the State of Kansas and of other officers and citizens in said State, and all papers presented to the Clerk in reference to the election and qualification of Hon. S. R. Peters, of said State, be referred to the Committee on Elections, when appointed, with instructions to report to the House, at the earliest time practicable, whether Mr. Peters is eligible to a seat in this House; and if not, whether Hon. S. N. Wood, the contestant, is entitled to the seat.

Mr. CALKINS. Before moving to lay upon the table the resolution just offered, which it is my purpose to do, I desire to make a statement to the House. But before I make the statement I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] whether, in objecting to the swearing in of this member from Kansas now, he admits that the credentials which he presents from his State are perfect in form. I will ask the Clerk to read them.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have stated I will not make further objection to the gentleman being sworn in.

Mr. KASSON. Then I move as a matter of privilege that the gentleman be sworn in.

Mr. CALKINS. The objection to the gentleman being sworn in being withdrawn, I will move, not that the resolution do lie upon the table, but that it go to the Committee on Elections when appointed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state it is perfectly immaterial to me whether the oath be now administered or the resolution be first considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to suggest that the qualification of a member being a matter of the very highest privilege, perhaps the oath should be first administered, and then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] can offer his resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw the resolution until the oath has been administered.

Mr. PETERS then presented himself, and qualified by taking the oath prescribed by section 1756 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now move the resolution which was read by the Clerk a few moments ago.

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] insists upon the immediate consideration of his resolution the Chair will direct the Clerk to call the names of the Delegates from the Territories, that they may be qualified.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw the resolution for that purpose.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to present a question of high privilege. When the Clerk of this House was calling the roll this morning, referring to the vacancy in the second district of the State of Mississippi he stated that if the certificate from the governor issued to Van H. Manning had been presented to him he should have filed it and placed the name of Mr. Manning upon the roll.

For reasons which were satisfactory to Mr. Manning, he chose not to present that certificate until some action had been taken on the part of the House. This morning I called upon the attorney of Mr. Manning and asked permission to present his credentials to the House for such action as the House might see proper to take in relation to that vacancy.

It has been the custom, Mr. Speaker, to have no vacancy except where absolutely necessary. The second Congressional district of Mississippi is entitled to a Representative on this floor. I believe it has been the policy of this House, by an unbroken chain of precedents, to seat the member who may have the certificate of the governor.

I have here the certificate issued by the governor of Mississippi to Mr. Manning, and I ask that it be read by the Clerk. I desire then to offer a resolution which I hold in my hand in relation to the matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdrew my resolution for the purpose suggested by the Speaker, the swearing in of the Delegates from the Territories.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will state that the certificate is in the usual form of certificates from that State; the same exactly, I believe, as presented by the other gentlemen from that State.

Mr. KEIFER. Of course there can be no objection to the reading of this certificate, if it be proposed to submit any motion with reference to the swearing in of the gentleman referred to. But I desire to state to the House that Mr. Manning himself never accepted that certificate. And I will state further, if it is to be treated as accepted, that he has put upon the files of the House a statement which shows that he was beaten in that election by 980 votes. That is in his answer as formally filed; and he has also stated in that answer, in effect, that he would not ask to be seated on that certificate.

Now, do gentlemen propose to force him to do that which he would not himself do? That is the question which I desire to ask. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] propose to require Mr. Manning to be sworn in against his will?

Mr. CONVERSE. After the reading of the certificate I will submit a resolution, and then we can discuss the question of fact when we come to that. Our claim is that Mr. Manning not only holds the certificate and is therefore prima facie entitled to the seat, but that upon the contest he will be shown to be in fact entitled to the seat. I ask for the reading of the certificate.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not object to the certificate being read.

Mr. CALKINS. Before the certificate is read I desire to correct one statement which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] made with reference to the statement of the Clerk, inasmuch as the Clerk himself can not make the correction. I did not understand the Clerk to say that had General Manning presented his credentials to him he would have put his name on the roll. I make that statement in justice to the Clerk.

Mr. CONVERSE. I think the record will show that he did state exactly what I said. That is immaterial, however. I ask that the credentials be read.

The SPEAKER. The credentials will be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. In acceding to the request of the Speaker, who said that he desired to administer the oath to the Delegates from the Territories, after which my resolution would be in order, I did not yield for any other business to take precedence. I therefore ask that the matter referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] be withheld until the Delegates have been qualified.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what motion the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] proposes to submit. If it is a motion to administer the oath to Mr. Manning as a member-elect of this House, it would of course take precedence over the swearing in of the Delegates and over the matter proposed to be submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. Until the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is submitted it will be impossible for the Chair to decide.

Mr. CONVERSE. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk, on which I demand the previous question.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a question of order. The reading of the prima facie certificate is a question of privilege; when that has been read we shall see what is next in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood there was no objection to the reading of the certificate; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] claims that he had yielded his right to the floor simply for the purpose of having the oath administered to the Delegates from the Territories.

Mr. COX, of New York. But, as I understand, my friend from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] proposes to offer his resolution before the credentials are read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the certificate will be read, and then the Chair will hear what is the nature of the motion of the gentleman from Ohio before determining whether or not it has precedence over that submitted by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

State of Mississippi to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas it appears by the returns received at the office of the secretary of state, as certified to me by that officer, that Van H. Manning is duly and constitutionally elected to the office of Representative in and to the Forty-eighth Congress from the second Congressional district of the State of Mississippi: Now know ye, that in consequence thereof, and by virtue of the constitution and laws of this State, we do authorize and empower him, the said Van H. Manning, to execute and fulfill the duties of that office according to law, and to have and to hold said office, with all the powers, privileges, and emoluments to the same of right belonging, for the term prescribed by law.

In testimony whereof, I, Robert Lowry, governor of the State aforesaid, have caused these letters to be made patent, and the great seal of the State to be hereunto affixed.

Given under my hand at the city of Jackson the 18th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1882.

ROBERT LOWRY.

By the governor:
HENRY C. MYERS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have read in this connection, and with the same purpose, the other papers which have been filed with the Clerk—papers in the nature of certificates showing the result of the election—all the papers pertaining to this matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to reading all the other papers?

Mr. COX, of New York, and Mr. CONVERSE objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would have the right to have them read in his own time.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not refer to the testimony, but to the certificates of the canvassing board showing the result of the election. This is not a paper which has been filed with the Clerk; the others are.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALKINS. The question of order I make is this: The Clerk has stated to the House that there are other papers, certificates filed by General Chalmers claiming this seat; and that statement having been made, the House, before it swears in either of these gentlemen on the prima facie case, has the right to have those certificates read.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask that my motion be put.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no question that the House or any member has the right to have all the papers read when there is a motion before the House in reference to this matter——

Mr. CONVERSE. I make my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has sent up his motion in writing, and when it has been read all the papers, of course, will come before the House in the consideration of the matter.

Mr. CALKINS. But, Mr. Speaker, if the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is to be followed, as I understood him to indicate, by a demand of the previous question, then I ask whether the question of order could properly be raised at that point? If it could—if our rights are saved—that is all we desire.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman from Ohio propose to move the previous question?

Mr. CONVERSE. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman from Ohio, as I understand, showed a disposition to move the previous question on his resolution, which would of course cut off debate upon it. Now the question is whether the Chair would hold that the reading of these other certificates would be in the nature of debate. To save this question of order, and in view of the statement made by the Clerk of this House that other certificates have been filed in his office asking that the name of General Chalmers be put upon the roll as the member from the second district of Mississippi, I demand that those certificates be read as well as that submitted by the gentleman from Ohio before action be taken upon the resolution and before either claimant to the seat be sworn in. It is this point of order which I desire to save.

The SPEAKER. The Chair dislikes, of course, to decide absolutely any question of order before it arises; but from present information the Chair would be inclined to hold that the reading of those papers, they being mere matters of evidence, would be in the nature of debate.

Mr. CALKINS. That was the point I was fearful of; and for this reason I desire to raise now the point of order that where there are two claimants to a seat and the House is called upon to decide the prima facie case (and here are two gentlemen struggling to be sworn in upon certificates) it certainly is the right of the House to hear both certificates read before acting upon either.

Mr. CONVERSE. There is but one certificate from the governor—from the executive; the other papers relate to the merits of the case.

Mr. CALKINS. We have the statement of the Clerk that certificates have been filed in his office and a request made that General Chalmers be sworn in upon those certificates; but the Clerk refused to put his name on the roll and submitted the question—very properly—to the House. This is the first stage at which the question which I now present could be raised; and I wish to save that question, because if the reading of those certificates be in the nature of debate the motion for the previous question would cut off the right to have them read.

Mr. CONVERSE. I insist on my motion.

Mr. CALKINS. A question of order is pending.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's question of order?

Mr. CALKINS. The question of order is this: I now ask that the Clerk read also the certificates, which he has referred to as being in his hands, from the executive officer of Mississippi, relative to the right of General Chalmers to be sworn in on the prima facie case.

Mr. TUCKER. I would ask the gentleman from Indiana whether there is any certificate, according to the law of Mississippi, signed by the executive of the State, in favor of General Chalmers?

Mr. CALKINS. I will answer the gentleman by saying, if he refers to what I know about it personally, that it is my wish to present to the House a question of law arising upon the statutes of Mississippi on that point. Whether the governor has signed any certificate or not I do not know, but that the secretary of state under the law has made a certificate I do know as a matter of fact, which I think under a fair construction of the statutes of Mississippi entitles General Chalmers to a prima facie seat upon the floor.

Mr. BELFORD. If the gentleman from Indiana will yield to me for one moment I will call the attention of my Democratic friends to a precedent which while exceedingly unpleasant to me was very effective to them. [Laughter.] You on that side of the House now have so large a majority you can afford to be decent in this Congress. The precedent I wish to refer to, made by my Democratic friends on the other side, is this: I was elected to the Forty-fifth Congress [interruption and laughter]—you can answer me when I get through. I was elected to the Forty-fifth Congress. I had the certificate from the governor of Colorado. I had a majority of 2,700 honest votes in my State. I came here and presented that certificate to this House. My competitor, knowing that you gentlemen of the Democratic side had a vast majority and expecting to obtain a seat through your partisan partiality, came here with a canvass from various counties as against my certificate, and you referred my case to the Committee on Elections. If you acted honestly then why should you act otherwise now? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MILLS. Permit me for one moment.

Mr. CONVERSE. I rise to a point of order. I insist the pending question shall be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided that at this stage of the proceeding these papers could not be read except by consent.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object, and ask for the reading of my resolution.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, they are simply papers which have been filed with the Clerk of the last House, and are not before this House except as evidence.

Mr. CALKINS. I make the further point that the certificate which has been read from the Clerk's desk refers to the fact as certified by the secretary of state to the governor. Upon that certificate he therefore issued this commission. I desire to state that if the certificate of the secretary of state is here it certainly ought to be read in connection with the credentials.

It is as much a part of it as in an instrument referring to another paper, where both must be read before the instrument can be construed.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to make a supplement to the historical statement just presented by the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object to all debate at this time.

Mr. MILLS. The certificate of the gentleman from Colorado stated that the election was held on a day not authorized by law.

Mr. MONEY. That is so.

Mr. MILLS. The statement on the face of the certificate showed that the election was illegal. That was the reason why the gentleman was not admitted to his seat. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio insists on his objection to the paper being read.

Mr. BELFORD. I think the House at that time received the certificates made out by the county canvassers, and upon a resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] who sits at my side the House referred that case to the Committee on Elections. That is what they did. A Republican was elected then, and yet they relegated me to the Committee on Elections. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. The Republican was elected in October and the Democrat in November. That is what was the matter.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not desire to wrestle with the opinion of the Chair, and therefore I ask permission of the gentleman from Ohio to have read a section of the law of Mississippi with reference to this certificate of the governor as read.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object until my resolution has been read.

The SPEAKER. The resolution of the gentleman from Ohio will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Van H. Manning holds the certificate of the governor of the State of Mississippi in due form, giving him the prima facie right to a seat on this floor as a Representative of the second district of Mississippi in the Forty-eighth Congress: Therefore,

Resolved, That the said Van H. Manning immediately qualify as a member of this House as a Representative of said district without prejudice to the final right to the seat.

Mr. CONVERSE. On that resolution I ask the previous question.

Mr. CALKINS. Before the gentleman insists——

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to move an amendment.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object, and insist upon my motion.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield before insisting upon the demand for the previous question, to allow the law bearing upon this subject to be read in the presence of the House.

Mr. CONVERSE. There will be time enough when the previous question is ordered. I object at this time.

Mr. CALKINS. But if the law is read in the presence of the House it may not be necessary to order the previous question.

Mr. CONVERSE. I do not yield.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Indiana ought to remember that this side of the House has been frequently compelled to submit to the enforcement of a similar demand from that side.

Mr. CALKINS. If we did wrong, then you ought to do right.

Mr. COX, of New York. We propose to do right. The gentleman from Indiana ought himself to bow to the previous question.

Mr. CONVERSE. I insist upon my motion. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the previous question be now ordered?

Mr. CALKINS. If in order, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. There is no second allowed or required by the rule on this motion.

Mr. MAYO. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question for information.

Mr. CONVERSE. I must decline to yield for a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield. The question is, Shall the previous question be now ordered?

The question was taken.

Mr. CALKINS. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 159, noes 97.

Mr. CALKINS. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. CALKINS and Mr. CONVERSE were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 151, noes 108.

Mr. CALKINS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 68 members voting therefor.

The SPEAKER. The question is will the House now order the previous question, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. KASSON. Before the roll is called I desire to rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KASSON. The resolution submitted by the gentleman from Ohio was not distinctly heard in this part of the Hall, and there is some doubt as to its terms—whether the resolution demands, though it does not assert, the right of Mr. Manning to be sworn in at this time.

I ask, therefore, that it be again read for information, so that we may know before being called upon to vote on the resolution whether the House orders him to be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the resolution will be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. KASSON. Now I desire to ask the further question, has the House the right to order a man who does not claim his right to a seat on this floor to be sworn in?

Mr. CONVERSE. He does claim his right to a seat upon the floor, and has never admitted to anybody, either publicly or privately, but that he was honestly elected.

Mr. KASSON. The papers which the gentleman from Ohio declines to allow to be read in this connection, if I am correctly informed, show exactly the contrary. I wish he would allow them to be read so that all the facts may appear.

Mr. CONVERSE. I must decline to yield for that purpose. If the gentleman from Iowa will go to the case of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] he will find an exactly parallel case. He presented the certificate of the governor, and we did not object; but we have on file a statement from the secretary of state showing the same state of facts that appear in this case, as we claim.

Mr. KASSON. But the gentleman from Ohio appears here and is claiming his seat. It is publicly alleged that the gentleman from Mississippi referred to in the resolution does not claim his right to a seat.

Mr. CONVERSE. That is entirely a mistake. The gentleman has never admitted, as I have stated, that there was any doubt of his right.

The SPEAKER. This debate is entirely out of order.

Mr. McKINLEY. Inasmuch as my name has been mentioned in this connection, I simply wish to state that there is no certificate filed with the secretary of state contradicting the certificate of the governor of Ohio in my case.

Mr. CONVERSE. The gentleman is mistaken; there is such a certificate.

Mr. McKINLEY. I was informed by the secretary of state that there was no such certificate.

Mr. CONVERSE. I filed the certificate myself.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question; and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 162, nays 129, not voting 30; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

After the second call of the roll, Mr. CALKINS said: I ask that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I desire to know if my name has been recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman's name is not recorded.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the Speaker has no right to entertain the request of a member to be permitted to vote who has not voted on the first or second roll-call. The gentleman's vote can not be received unless he states that he actually did vote upon this question and that the Clerk failed to record his name.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. CALKINS. I now move to commit the resolution to the Committee on Elections, when appointed, with the instructions which I send to the desk and ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. COX, of New York. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CALKINS. Let the instructions first be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the certificate of the governor of Mississippi certifying the election of Hon. Van H. Manning to this Congress from the second Congressional district of Mississippi, together with the certificate of the secretary of state and all other papers in the hands of the Clerk of this House touching the right of Hon. J. R. Chalmers to a seat from said district, in this House, be, and they are hereby, referred to the Committee on Elections, when appointed, who are hereby directed to report to this House without delay which of said parties, if either, is entitled prima facie to be sworn in as a member pending the contest on the merits, and not to affect the final right to said seat.

MEMBER SWORN IN.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a question of the highest privilege. My colleague from Kentucky [Mr. ROBERTSON] is present, and desires to have the oath of office administered.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will come forward the oath of office will be administered.

Mr. CALKINS. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. THOMAS A. ROBERTSON appeared and qualified by taking the prescribed oath.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw his motion for a moment, that I may move that the House shall meet each day at 12 meridian, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have a resolution, which I send to the desk, and which will accomplish that object.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to any yielding for the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the resolution be read. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no power to have the resolution read if it be objected to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I decline to withdraw the objection. If I had been going to withdraw it I would not have made it. We can take that up after the pending matter is disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state that besides fixing the time for the meeting of the House at 12 o'clock, my resolution makes our time that of the 75th meridian, so as to conform to railway time.

The SPEAKER. To the consideration of that resolution the Chair understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to object.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to anything except the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX], that the daily hour of the meeting of the House until otherwise ordered shall be 12 o'clock meridian?

Mr. KEIFER. The part of the resolution which relates to the daily hour of meeting being 12 o'clock should be considered in order, but the balance of the resolution is not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the resolution offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] relates to no subject except fixing the daily hour of meeting of the House. The effect of the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is to adopt a new method of calculating time.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have now no time of meeting; we can fix the hour of twelve or ten minutes before twelve.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that we have the actual time.

Mr. SPRINGER. But we have not adopted the actual time; that is all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX].

Mr. SPRINGER. Would not my motion be in order as an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why not?

The SPEAKER. Because the Chair thinks the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] relates to an entirely separate and distinct subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair has not heard it read yet.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman himself has stated what it was.

Mr. SPRINGER. It simply states that the hour of meeting of the House shall be 12 o'clock of the seventy-fifth meridian.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CALKINS. Pending the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], it has been suggested that it is desirable on the part of the other side of the House to perfect the organization of the House to-night. I therefore suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] to allow this matter to go over without prejudice, in order that the organization of the House may be perfected to-night if desired.

Many members objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS], the question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to upon a division—ayes 159, noes 70; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. COKE. I ask leave to present a memorial, which is brief, and I desire that, without being read, it may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator please state the nature of the memorial?

Mr. COKE. It is a memorial from the United States district attorney for the western district of Texas, touching legislation which he deems necessary affecting the Federal judiciary. It is a brief document, not lengthy, and it is such a one as I should be glad to see published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas presents a memorial of the United States district attorney for the western district of that State on the subject of improving the laws relating to the administration of justice in that district, and asks that it be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I think this is a very good time in which to present a suggestion that must have occurred to every Senator at previous sessions with reference to the enormous increase of the amount of matter that is printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That publication was meant to be a succinct and concise statement of the debates of both Houses of Congress; but the practice has grown from time to time—a vicious practice, as I think—of requiring a vast amount of unimportant and immaterial and inconsequential matter to be printed in that publication.

The memorial presented by the Senator from Texas is that of a private citizen, so far as the Congress of the United States is concerned. To be sure, he has an official capacity; but what he has to say does not in any sense whatever belong to the publication of the debates of Congress.

I hope that this suggestion will be enough to call the attention of Senators to the impropriety of this practice and to enable us by common consent to avoid it hereafter. I make the suggestion now, because it would be invidious to make it after any memorials had been so printed. I agree that in regard to the resolutions of legislatures and other great public bodies an exception may, perhaps, properly be made; but I am very sure that the Senator from Texas himself, if he will think a moment, will see that there is no propriety and no necessity for the publication that he asks; and he is aware that if all similar material is incorporated the bulk of the RECORD will soon become so enormous that it will be practically valueless for the purposes for which it was designed.

I do not wish to be understood as making any objection to this particular request of the Senator from Texas; I am aware that he can accomplish what he desires by having the memorial read, if there is no objection; but this suggestion is made in the interest of what I believe to be economy and the proper administration of the public service, and I will, therefore, at this time formally object to the admission of this memorial under the rules, for the purpose of obtaining the sense of the Senate upon the general question as to how far this species of memorials or petitions shall be printed in that publication, which was designed merely for the presentation of the action of Congress itself.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I concur in the general proposition of the Senator from Kansas that many things are printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which properly have no place there, but this memorial is not, in my judgment, one of that character. It refers to a matter affecting the judiciary of the whole country—to a matter of general public interest. I desire it in the RECORD in order that proper attention may be attracted to it. Our judges may substantially be said to be irresponsible while holding office for life. This memorial asks for legislation compelling a performance of duty by judicial officers who have assumed the responsibilities and are receiving the emoluments of the judicial office. It also asks for legislation prohibiting the practice of nepotism, alleged to be quite general in the appointments made by our Federal judges. Upon these general propositions I fully agree with the memorialist. Since the objection of the Senator from Kansas defeats my motion to publish in the RECORD, I will ask that it be read by the Secretary so that it will go into the RECORD as a part of my remarks, with the understanding, however, that I do not indorse any personal flings or innuendoes contained in it, believing, as I do, that our Texas judges are as little obnoxious to criticism as those of other States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks that this memorial be read at the desk. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

To the honorable President of the Senate and
Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, a resident of the western district of Texas, most respectfully invites your attention to two evils existing in the administration of justice in the United States district courts, and most respectfully prays that the same may be remedied at the present session of Congress.

First. The United States district judges, whilst most industriously drawing their salaries, are persistently and without valid excuses and upon the smallest pretexts, failing to hold the terms of their courts as fixed by law, and so far as your memorialist is informed and believes, there is no deduction of salaries or other remedy for such failure.

Second. It is almost the invariable rule of all the district judges, as soon as inducted into office, to appoint their sons, sons-in-law, brothers and brothers-in-law, and other relatives to the places of district and deputy district clerks in their courts, and that, too, without the remotest thought of their moral character, honesty, or capacity for the places, and having so appointed them to hold them in office, to the great wrong of the public.

In urging upon your consideration the necessity of a remedy for these evils I have but to say that judges are but men, and that there exists no law that compels them to hold their courts at the peril of loss of salary or other inconvenience; and the facts are, as we are informed, that the district judges all over the Union are holding just such terms of their courts as they find convenient and no more, and permitting United States prisoners to linger in jails months, and even years, for trial.

In the western district of Texas the district judge, without the excuse of sickness or other good cause, has in the last three years held but two terms of his courts at Brownsville, Tex., out of the six terms he should have held by law.

In the eastern district of Texas the judge failed to hold his courts the last term at Tyler and both of the last terms of courts at Jefferson, though United States prisoners were confined in the jails awaiting trial at these terms.

The invariable course of these defaulting judges is to make a sham of holding the courts by having all the jurors and witnesses summoned, and at the last hour get up the pretext of a sick child, a wife gets a fall, or other similar casualty, and back out, the true cause being laziness and fear of a few dollars' expense from home, and no loss or inconvenience to themselves if they do not hold the courts.

In the interest of public right and justice this thing should be stopped. This much on the first point.

On the second, of preventing the district judges from appointing their relatives to office under them, I candidly say that this is the great evil in all United States courts, and has had in all times past and must have in all future time until remedied the most baleful influence upon all concerned.

When a litigant is so unfortunate as to get into a United States court where the judge is the father of the clerk what chance has he to enforce his rights against the neglect, misfeasance, and malfeasance of the clerk? What chance has the Government or the people against the clerk who is a depositary of public moneys if he should embezzle the public funds with his father on the bench? But the mention of the case is the greatest argument. The court and its clerk should not be related by blood or marriage, and if they are, wrong, oppression, and corruption are the results.

One more word: The chief reason for old judges holding over after seventy years is the fact that they have their sons, sons-in-law, brothers and brothers-in-law, uncles, aunts, nephews, nieces, and cousins all pensioned on the United States, and to keep them there they stay themselves.

Your memorialist forwards herewith the draught of two acts of Congress which he believes will meet the evils complained of, but if not, then he prays that your most honorable bodies will, in your wisdom, devise some proper remedy.

Most respectfully,

A. J. EVANS,
United States Attorney Western District of Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Sullivan Forehand and Henry C. Wadsworth, of New York, praying compensation for the use by the United States Government of their patented cartridge; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I present a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, which is also signed by the Maritime Association and several other associations of that city, which asks for the location and construction of a marine hospital at the port of New York. The petition sets forth the fact that, while nearly one-fifth of the sum collected from the commerce of the whole country for the support of the marine hospitals is collected at the port of New York, there has not up to the present time ever been a permanent marine hospital established at that port, and the petition asks that such a hospital may be established. It is numerously signed by various associations of the city of New York. I ask that it may lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented the petition of George Frick, of Amsterdam, N. Y., late a private in the Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, praying to be allowed a pension; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Pensions when appointed.

Mr. JONAS presented the petitions of William W. Hunter, Charles Le Sassier, and others, citizens of New Orleans, La., praying for the passage of a bill sending the claims of citizens who suffered by French spoliations before the Court of Claims; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

He also presented the petition of the American Institute of Homeopathy, praying legislation granting equal privileges to the graduates of all schools of medicine in appointments to the public service; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

He also presented the petition of Peter Keverney, of New Orleans, La., praying to be reimbursed for certain losses alleged to have been incurred by him while carpenter on board the steam-transport Lewis Whiteman; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of the Mexican Veterans' Association of Polk County, Missouri, praying for the passage of a bill to pension soldiers of the Mexican war; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Pensions when appointed.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade of San Francisco, Cal., on the subject of bankruptcy legislation; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., in favor of an extension of signal-service facilities on the Pacific coast; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed.

Mr. LAMAR presented the petition of the personal representatives of David Irvine and C. J. Field, of Bolivar County, Mississippi, praying compensation for cotton belonging to them and sold under a decree of a United States court; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

He also presented the petition of the personal representatives of Ayres

P. Merrill, deceased, of Natchez, Miss., praying compensation for stores and supplies alleged to have been taken by the Army of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 1) to amend section 2 of "an act making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1879; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill proposes to amend what is commonly known as the arrears-of-pensions-act by removing the limitation named therein. I ask that it lie on the table, and when the Committee on Pensions is formed that it may be referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. GARLAND asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 2) to amend chapter 1 of the Revised Statutes in reference to the election of Senators in Congress; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask the Secretary to read the bill at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 19 of chapter 1 of the Revised Statutes, in reference to the election of Senators in Congress, be amended, as follows: "After the word 'State,' in the second and last line thereof, insert 'And such certificate shall show the whole number of members elected to the Legislature choosing the Senator; the day and date of the meeting, and the day and date of the organization of such Legislature; the number of votes cast in each House, and the number cast for each person named for the place of Senator; that such votes were cast viva voce, and that these several matters were entered on the journal of each House, respectively, as they occurred therein; and that the members of both Houses convened in joint assembly on the next day after the meeting in separate Houses; that the journal of each House was read in such joint assembly, and in case of any person receiving a majority of all the votes cast, that fact was openly declared in such joint assembly by the presiding officer thereof; and in case of failure to elect on the first day of voting, that fact shall appear in such certificate, and also that the joint assembly proceeded on the day following to choose, by a viva voce vote of each member present a person for Senator; also the whole number of votes cast in such joint assembly, and the number of votes cast for each person for Senator, and the person receiving a majority of all the votes cast, and that he was openly declared by the presiding officer of such joint assembly duly elected. But in case of failure to elect in joint assembly on the first day of its meeting, such certificate shall so state substantially, as herein provided, the proceedings had in such joint assembly each succeeding day thereafter until a Senator is elected and duly declared elected.'"

Mr. GARLAND. I desire to have the bill referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections when appointed; but before that is done it is due the Senate that I should make a statement of the reasons which have moved me to introduce the bill.

If Senators have given this particular matter any attention, it must be very evident to them that there has been little or no form pursued in making out the certificates of the election of Senators under the act of the 25th of July, 1866. In fact nearly every certificate is a form unto itself. In times of party excitement, when there was a contest for supremacy here in the Senate, objections, sometimes upon their face rather frivolous, might be taken to these certificates, and the representation of a State, if not destroyed entirely for the time being, greatly interfered with. At this time there is no such excitement prevailing in the country; we are all in good humor, politically speaking; and this is an admirable opportunity to fix this subject.

My attention was called to the certificates of the twenty-six Senators returned at this term. Out of that number there were thirteen, just one-half, of which I have made an abstract here, that would not stand the test under the act of the 25th of July, 1866, if objection had been raised, and I think it is high time that something should be done to remove this difficulty, and in order that what has been done at this session may not be taken as a precedent hereafter to estop anybody, whether belonging to one party or the other, I offer a bill which I think will probably correct this trouble. If not, certainly the Committee on Privileges and Elections, attention being called to it, can prepare and report a bill that will remove it.

I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections when appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The bill will lie on the table and be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections when formed.

Mr. BECK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 3) for the removal of all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 4) to repeal the act of July 2, 1862, and such sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States as perpetuate the oath prescribed in said act; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 5) to repeal section 1218 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

Mr. BECK. These are the same class of bills which I have introduced at the beginning of every Congress for ten years. As the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] very well observed, there is good feeling now, and I hope they will be acted on, so as to remove this blot from our statute-book.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

Mr. BECK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 6) amendatory of title 48 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to authorize the purchase of foreign-built ships by citizens of the United States for use in the foreign carrying trade; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Commerce when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 7) to authorize the payment of customs duties in legal-tender notes; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Finance when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 8) for the relief of F. W. Peyton, administrator de bonis non of James D. Morton, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 9) for the relief of Warren Mitchell; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 10) for the relief of Harry I. Todd, late keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Finance when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 11) for the relief of Rosa Vertner Jeffreys; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 12) for the relief of Elizabeth Carson; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 13) for the relief of those suffering from the destruction of the salt-works near Manchester, Ky., pursuant to the orders of Maj. Gen. Don Carlos Buell; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I rise to an inquiry with reference to some of these bills. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether there has been any adverse report on the Mitchell bill?

Mr. BECK. In the Warren Mitchell case there was an adverse report, but in none of the others. I do not ask to have the papers withdrawn in the Warren Mitchell case; there has been an adverse report in that; but in the other cases I desire to have the papers on file withdrawn and referred with the bills.

Mr. MCMILLAN. In the Jeffreys case, also, has there not been an adverse report?

Mr. BECK. No, sir, there has never been an adverse report in that case, but always a report in favor of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules of the Senate require that copies of the papers shall be left in all cases where adverse reports have been made. The order for the withdrawal of the papers will be made subject to the rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But this is in reference to withdrawing papers for reference again, which the rule prohibits if there has been an adverse report, unless there is new evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order will be made, subject to all the requirements of the rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 14) to amend sections 1756 and 1757 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say that this bill covers two sections of the Revised Statutes embraced by one of the bills introduced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], but it contains what his bills hitherto have not done—I do not know what the one that is now introduced contains—a limitation, a saving clause which does not affect the character of the oath, but which does affect the security of the Treasury, &c., regarding claims that might be made in some cases and regarding penalties that might have been incurred already for false swearing, &c. I will say that for one—and I speak, of course, only for myself—I am, as at present advised, quite willing to substitute for what is called the iron-clad oath the oath that is provided by section 1757 for those who cannot properly take the iron-clad oath. I ask that the bill lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 15) to provide for the further protection of citizens of the United States and others against the violation of certain rights secured to them by the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say, in reference to that bill, that it undertakes, and I believe successfully, to accomplish the security for the protection of the colored citizens of the United States against the inhuman, and, as I believe, wicked and cruel and prejudicial, distinctions that in some of the States are still made against them in respect of their civil rights, and to protect them consistently with the late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon that subject. I commend it to the early and careful attention of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 16) further to protect the constitutional rights of citizens, and to punish violations of the same; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a redraught of a bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary some years ago, pursuant to a resolution of the Senate, which was carefully considered then, and deals in general with the same rights of our colored citizens, and white as well, in respect of being secured in the enjoyment of the dearest of all freemen's rights, the right to a free vote and a fair count; and I hope all sides of the Senate Chamber (differing from our previous experience on those subjects) when it is again reported, as I trust it will be, will vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 17) to provide for the establishment of a postal telegraphic system; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 18) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 19) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims when appointed.

Mr. SHERMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 20) to provide for the issue of circulation to national banking associations; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire simply to say that this bill modifies the existing law only in a single phrase, allowing notes to be issued on 90 per cent. of the market value of bonds deposited, instead of 90 per cent. of the face value.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the bill, because I hope the Senate without division will at an early day pass the bill, as it will relieve not only those engaged in the banking business, but the people at large from a fear that the operation of existing law will too rapidly contract the currency, especially the banking currency.

The only amendment proposed by this bill (which I may say also receives the sanction of the executive officers connected with the subject) is that it allows notes to be issued to the amount of 90 per cent. of the market value of the bonds, and never to exceed 95 per cent. If 95 per cent. of the market value of the bonds is reached at any time by the fluctuation in the price of bonds, then it becomes the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency to call for an additional quantity of bonds. In my judgment this will meet the difficulty that is now exciting so much attention among business men. At any rate I call the attention of the Senate to it, and will at an early day ask the consideration of the Committee on Finance to it and the action of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

A bill to provide for the issue of circulation to national banking associations.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That upon a deposit of bonds as required by law any national banking association making the same shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes of different denominations in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, equal in amount to 90 per cent. of the average current market value of the United States bonds so transferred and delivered for the previous fiscal year, and at no time shall the total amount of such notes issued to any such association exceed the amount at such time actually paid in of its capital stock, nor shall they exceed 95 per cent. of the market value of such bonds; and that all laws and parts of laws of the United States inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator ask that the bill be referred?

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance when formed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

Mr. SHERMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 21) for the relief of C. H. Eddy; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

Mr. HOAR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 22) to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 23) amending an act granting a pension to Charles Slawson; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Pensions when appointed.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 29) for the relief of the State National Bank of Boston, Mass.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say in reference to the last bill that it is a bill which was reported upon adversely by the Judiciary Committee in the last Congress, and recommitted to that committee and not reported, I believe, a second time. The gentleman who sent me the bill requested that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. I should, however, in spite of that request, have moved to send it to the Committee on the Judiciary, that committee having once considered it; but I suppose all that will happen to the bill will be that the matter will be sent to the Court of Claims, under the new law, to investigate the facts. If there should be an original investigation in the Senate, it seems to me proper that the same committee should have the bill. I move now that it be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to say that this bill has been prepared under the direction of a gentleman who served many years as United States district judge in that Territory and is entirely familiar with its affairs, and who is of opinion that the only way to reach the great evil existing there is to change the Territorial government. Mr. HARRISON. With respect to the reference proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, I desire to suggest that as there were at the last session before the Committee on Territories, and are now prepared and ready to be introduced again, certain bills in relation to the organization of civil government in Alaska, he should allow this bill also to go to that committee, as it would be very appropriate in connection with such legislation as is proposed there, and in order to make the proposed action harmonious the question of education should be considered in the same connection.

Mr. PLATT. I introduced the bill by request, and was requested to suggest its reference to the Committee on Education and Labor; but upon the assurance of a member of the Committee on Territories I have no objection to the reference that he proposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Territories when appointed.

This morning the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] introduced a bill in reference to certain oaths prescribed in the statutes, and the President of the Senate also introduced a bill in reference to sections 1756 and 1757 on that subject. In June, 1882, the Committee on the Judiciary, by a unanimous report, instructed me to bring in a bill covering those subjects, which I reported, but it was never reached upon the Calendar. I ask leave now, without previous notice, to introduce the bill, and to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CLARK, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar of the Senate, and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House has assembled, and that JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, has been chosen Speaker, and JOHN B. CLARK, jr., a citizen of the State of Missouri, Clerk; and that the House of Representatives is ready to proceed to business.

I am further directed to inform the Senate that the House has passed a resolution that a committee of three be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. LAMAR, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Railroads when appointed.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers in the case of Frances E. Stewart, administratrix of Michael S. Stewart, deceased, of the State of Tennessee, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

THE YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. VEST. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all leases, contracts, orders, instructions, or regulations made or issued by the Interior Department since the last session of Congress in relation to the Yellowstone National Park; also copies of any applications made for the privilege of erecting hotels or other buildings or for transporting tourists or visitors in said park, and what action was taken as to such applications; also the names of the persons appointed policemen or assistants to the superintendent of the park, and from what States they were appointed, and whether they are now residing in the park, as required by law; also copies of all correspondence and other papers in regard to said park placed on file in the Department since the last session.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from Missouri to also add copies of all orders issued by the Interior Department in reference to exclusive privileges in the park.

Mr. VEST. I believe that is included in the resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I did not quite understand it.

Mr. VEST. I intended it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The resolution was read.

Mr. DAWES. I think if the Senator would add "also by order of the Department" he would reach what I have in my mind.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that modification.

Mr. DAWES. Let it read, "issued by the Department or by its order."

Mr. VEST. That would be a good amendment. Let the resolution be so modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri modifies his resolution by adding after the words "made or issued by the Interior Department" the words "or by its order," and, so modified, he asks for the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

LEASES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. WALKER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish, for the information of the Senate, copies of all documents and correspondence in his office relating to leases of lands in the Indian Territory to citizens of the United States for cattle-grazing and other purposes.

RECESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, there being no Calendar, and no business upon the table, the Chair awaits the further pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN (at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.). On account of some delay in the organization of the other House, the committee have not been able to perform the duty enjoined upon them by the Senate and the House, to wait upon the President. I suggest, therefore, as further delay ought not to be created, that the Senate take a recess until half past 2 o'clock. I am told that by that time probably we shall be able to perform our duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio, that the Senate take a recess until half past 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

Mr. PLATT (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate take a further recess until 3 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 3 o'clock p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. BAYARD, the committee appointed in conjunction with a similar committee of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared below the bar, and

Mr. SHERMAN said: The committee on the part of the two Houses, directed by the respective Houses to wait upon the President and inform him of their organization and that they were ready to receive any communication he might see proper to make to them, have performed their duty; and he requests the committee to inform the two Houses that he sends them the compliments of the season, his congratulations upon their organization, and that he will immediately communicate to them a message in writing.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, appeared at the bar of the Senate, and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the Secretary and handed to the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Acting Secretary of the Senate (Mr. FRANCIS E. SHOBER) read the message, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

At the threshold of your deliberations I congratulate you upon the favorable aspect of the domestic and foreign affairs of this Government.

Our relations with other countries continue to be upon a friendly footing.

With the Argentine Republic, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Denmark, Hayti, Italy, Santo Domingo, and Sweden and Norway no incident has occurred which calls for special comment. The recent opening of new lines of telegraphic communication with Central America and Brazil permitted the interchange of messages of friendship with the governments of those countries.

During the year there have been perfected and proclaimed consular and commercial treaties with Serbia and a consular treaty with Roumania, thus extending our intercourse with the Danubian countries, while our eastern relations have been put upon a wider basis by treaties with Corea and Madagascar. The new boundary-survey treaty with Mexico, a trades-mark convention and a supplementary treaty of extradition with Spain, and conventions extending the duration of the Franco-American Claims Commission have also been proclaimed.

Notice of the termination of the fisheries articles of the treaty of Washington was duly given to the British Government, and the reciprocal privileges and exemptions of the treaty will accordingly cease on July 1, 1885. The fisheries industries, pursued by a numerous class of our citizens on the northern coasts both of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, are worthy of the fostering care of Congress. Whenever brought into competition with the like industries of other countries, our fishermen, as well as our manufacturers of fishing appliances and preparers of fish products, have maintained a foremost place. I suggest that Congress create a commission to consider the general question of our rights in the fisheries and the means of opening to our citizens, under just and enduring conditions, the richly stocked fishing waters and sealing grounds of British North America.

Question has arisen touching the deportation to the United States from the British Islands, by governmental or municipal aid, of persons unable there to gain a living and equally a burden on the community here. Such of these persons as fall under the pauper class as defined by law have been sent back in accordance with the provisions of our statutes. Her Majesty's Government has insisted that precautions have been taken before shipment to prevent these objectionable visitors from coming hither without guarantee of support by their relatives in this country. The action of the British authorities in applying measures for relief has, however, in so many cases proved ineffectual, and especially so in certain recent instances of needy emigrants reaching our territory through Canada, that a revision of our legislation upon this subject may be deemed advisable. Correspondence relative to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty has been continued and will be laid before Congress.

The legislation of France against the importation of prepared swine products from the United States has been repealed. That result is due no less to the friendly representations of this Government than to a growing conviction in France that the restriction was not demanded by any real danger to health.

Germany still prohibits the introduction of all swine products from America. I extended to the Imperial Government a friendly invitation to send experts to the United States to inquire whether the use of those products was dangerous to health. This invitation was declined. I have believed it of such importance, however, that the exact facts should be ascertained and promulgated, that I have appointed a competent commission to make a thorough investigation of the subject. Its members have shown their public spirit by accepting their trust without pledge of compensation, but I trust that Congress will see in the national and international bearings of the matter a sufficient motive for providing at least for reimbursement of such expenses as they may necessarily incur.

The coronation of the czar at Moscow afforded to this Government an occasion for testifying its continued friendship by sending a special envoy and a representative of the Navy to attend the ceremony.

While there have arisen during the year no grave questions affecting the status in the Russian Empire of American citizens of other faith than that held by the national church, this Government remains firm in its conviction that the rights of its citizens abroad should be in nowise affected by their religious belief.

It is understood that measures for the removal of the restrictions which now burden our trade with Cuba and Puerto Rico are under consideration by the Spanish Government.

The proximity of Cuba to the United States, and the peculiar methods of administration which there prevail, necessitate constant discussion and appeal on our part from the proceedings of the insular authorities. I regret to say that the just protests of this Government have not as yet produced satisfactory results.

The commission appointed to decide certain claims of our citizens against the Spanish Government, after the recognition of a satisfactory rule as to the validity and force of naturalization in the United States, has finally adjourned. Some of its awards, though made more than two years ago, have not yet been paid. Their speedy payment is expected.

Claims to a large amount which were held by the late commission to be without its jurisdiction have been diplomatically presented to the Spanish Government. As the action of the colonial authorities, which has given rise to these claims, was admittedly illegal, full reparation for the injury sustained by our citizens should be no longer delayed.

The case of the Masonic has not yet reached a settlement. The Manila court has found that the proceedings of which this Government has complained were unauthorized, and it is hoped that the Government of Spain will not withhold the speedy reparation which its sense of justice should impel it to offer for the unusual severity and unjust action of its subordinate colonial officers in the case of this vessel.

The Helvetian Confederation has proposed the inauguration of a class of international treaties for the referment to arbitration of grave questions between nations. This Government has assented to the proposed negotiation of such a treaty with Switzerland.

Under the treaty of Berlin, liberty of conscience and civil rights are assured to all strangers in Bulgaria. As the United States have no distinct conventional relations with that country and are not a party to the treaty, they should in my opinion maintain diplomatic representation at Sofia for the improvement of intercourse and the proper protection of the many American citizens who resort to that country as missionaries and teachers. I suggest that I be given authority to establish an agency and consulate-general at the Bulgarian capital.

The United States are now participating in a revision of the tariffs of the Ottoman Empire. They have assented to the application of a license tax to foreigners doing business in Turkey, but have opposed the oppressive storage tax upon petroleum entering the ports of that country.

The government of the Khedive has proposed that the authority of the mixed judicial tribunals in Egypt be extended so as to cover citizens of the United States accused of crime who are now triable before consular courts. This Government is not indisposed to accept the change, but believes that its terms should be submitted for criticism to the commission appointed to revise the whole subject.

At no time in our national history has there been more manifest need of close and lasting relations with a neighboring state than now exists with respect to Mexico. The rapid influx of our capital and enterprise into that country shows, by what has already been accomplished, the vast reciprocal advantages which must attend the progress of its internal development. The treaty of commerce and navigation of 1848 has been terminated by the Mexican Government, and in the absence of conventional engagements the rights of our citizens in Mexico now depend upon the domestic statutes of that republic. There have been instances of harsh enforcement of the laws against our vessels and citizens in Mexico and of denial of the diplomatic resort for their protection. The initial step toward a better understanding has been taken in the negotiation by the commission authorized by Congress of a treaty, which is still before the Senate awaiting its approval.

The provisions for the reciprocal crossing of the frontier by the troops in pursuit of hostile Indians have been prolonged for another year. The operations of the forces of both governments against these savages have been successful, and several of their most dangerous bands have been captured or dispersed by the skill and valor of United States and Mexican soldiers fighting in a common cause.

The convention for the resurvey of the boundary from the Rio Grande to the Pacific having been ratified and exchanged, the preliminary reconnaissance therein stipulated has been effected. It now rests with Congress to make provision for completing the survey and relocating the boundary monuments.

A convention was signed with Mexico on July 13, 1882, providing for the rehearing of the cases of Benjamin Weil and the Abra Silver Mining Company, in whose favor awards were made by the late American and Mexican Claims Commission. That convention still awaits the consent of the Senate. Meanwhile, because of those charges of fraudulent awards which have made a new commission necessary, the Executive has directed the suspension of payments of the distributive quota received from Mexico.

Our geographical proximity to Central America and our political and commercial relations with the states of that country justify, in my judgment, such a material increase of our consular corps as will place at each capital a consul-general.

The contest between Bolivia, Chile, and Peru has passed from the stage of strategic hostilities to that of negotiation, in which the counsels of this Government have been exercised. The demands of Chile for absolute cession of territory have been maintained, and accepted by the party of General Iglesias to the extent of concluding a treaty of peace with the Government of Chile in general conformity with the terms of the protocol signed in May last between the Chilean commander and General Iglesias. As a result of the conclusion of this treaty, General Iglesias has been formally recognized by Chile as President of Peru, and his government installed at Lima, which has been evacuated by the Chileans. A call has been issued by General Iglesias for a representative assembly, to be elected on the 13th of January, and to meet at Lima on the 1st of March next. Meanwhile the provisional government of General Iglesias has applied for recognition to the principal powers of America and Europe. When the will of the Peruvian people shall be manifested I shall not hesitate to recognize the government approved by them.

Diplomatic and naval representatives of this Government attended at Caracas the centennial celebration of the birth of the illustrious Bolivar. At the same time the inauguration of the statue of Washington in the Venezuelan capital testified to the veneration in which his memory is there held.

Congress at its last session authorized the Executive to propose to Venezuela a reopening of the awards of the mixed commission of Caracas. The departure from this country of the Venezuelan minister has delayed the opening of negotiations for reviving the commission. This Government holds that until the establishment of a treaty upon this subject the Venezuelan Government must continue to make the payments provided for in the convention of 1866.

There is ground for believing that the dispute growing out of the unpaid obligations due from Venezuela to France will be satisfactorily adjusted. The French cabinet has proposed a basis of settlement which meets my approval, but as it involves a recasting of the annual quotas of the foreign debt it has been deemed advisable to submit the proposal to the judgment of the cabinets of Berlin, Copenhagen, The Hague, London, and Madrid.

At the recent coronation of His Majesty King Kalakaua this Government was represented both diplomatically and by the formal visit of a vessel of war.

The question of terminating or modifying the existing reciprocity treaty with Hawaii is now before Congress. I am convinced that the charges of abuses and frauds under that treaty have been exaggerated, and I renew the suggestion of last year's message, that the treaty be modified wherever its provisions have proved onerous to legitimate trade between the two countries. I am not disposed to favor the entire cessation of the treaty relations which have fostered good-will between the countries and contributed toward the equality of Hawaii in the family of nations.

In pursuance of the policy declared by this Government of extending our intercourse with the Eastern nations, legations have during the past year been established in Persia, Siam, and Corea. It is probable that permanent missions of those countries will ere long be maintained in the United States. A special embassy from Siam is now on its way hither.

Treaty relations with Corea were perfected by the exchange at Seôul, on the 19th of May last, of the ratifications of the lately concluded convention, and envoys from the King of Tah Chosun have visited this country and received a cordial welcome. Corea, as yet unacquainted with the methods of Western civilization, now invites the attention of those interested in the advancement of our foreign trade, as it needs the implements and products which the United States are ready to supply. We seek no monopoly of its commerce and no advantages over other nations, but as the Chosunese, in reaching for a higher civilization, have confided in this Republic, we can not regard with indifference any encroachment on their rights.

China, by the payment of a money indemnity, has settled certain of the long-pending claims of our citizens, and I have strong hopes that the remainder will soon be adjusted.

Questions have arisen touching the rights of American and other foreign manufacturers in China under the provisions of treaties which permit aliens to exercise their industries in that country. On this specific point our own treaty is silent, but under the operation of the most-favored-nation clause we have like privileges with those of other powers. While it is the duty of the Government to see that our citizens have the full enjoyment of every benefit secured by treaty, I doubt the expediency of leading in a movement to constrain China to admit an interpretation which we have only an indirect treaty right to exact. The transference to China of American capital for the employment there of Chinese labor would in effect inaugurate a competition for the control of markets now supplied by our home industries.

There is good reason to believe that the law restricting the immigration of Chinese has been violated, intentionally or otherwise, by the officials of China upon whom is devolved the duty of certifying that the immigrants belong to the excepted classes.

Measures have been taken to ascertain the facts incident to this supposed infraction, and it is believed that the Government of China will co-operate with the United States in securing the faithful observance of the law.

The same considerations which prompted Congress at its last session to return to Japan the Simonoseki indemnity seems to me to require at its hands like action in respect to the Canton indemnity fund, now amounting to $300,000.

The question of the general revision of the foreign treaties of Japan has been considered in an international conference held at Tokio, but without definite result as yet. This Government is disposed to concede the requests of Japan to determine its own tariff duties, to provide such proper judicial tribunals as may commend themselves to the western powers for the trial of causes to which foreigners are parties, and to assimilate the terms and duration of its treaties to those of other civilized states.

Through our ministers at London and at Monrovia this Government has endeavored to aid Liberia in its differences with Great Britain touching the northwestern boundary of that republic. There is a prospect of adjustment of the dispute by the adoption of the Mannah River as the line. This arrangement is a compromise of the conflicting territorial claims, and takes from Liberia no country over which it has maintained effective jurisdiction.

The rich and populous valley of the Congo is being opened to commerce by a society called the International African Association, of which the King of the Belgians is the president and a citizen of the United States the chief executive officer. Large tracts of territory have been ceded to the association by native chiefs, roads have been opened, steamboats placed on the river, and the nuclei of states established at twenty-two stations under one flag, which offers freedom to commerce and prohibits the slave trade. The objects of the society are philanthropic. It does not aim at permanent political control, but seeks the neutrality of the valley. The United States can not be indifferent to this work nor to the interests of their citizens involved in it. It may become advisable for us to co-operate with other commercial powers in promoting the rights of trade and residence in the Congo Valley free from the interference or political control of any one nation.

In view of the frequency of invitations from foreign governments to participate in social and scientific congresses for the discussion of important matters of general concern I repeat the suggestion of my last message, that provision be made for the exercise of discretionary power by the Executive in appointing delegates to such convocations. Able specialists are ready to serve the national interests in such capacity without personal profit or other compensation than the defrayment of expenses actually incurred, and this a comparatively small annual appropriation would suffice to meet.

I have alluded in my previous messages to the injurious and vexatious restrictions suffered by our trade in the Spanish West Indies. Brazil, whose natural outlet for its great national staple, coffee, is in and through the United States, imposes a heavy export duty upon that product. Our petroleum exports are hampered in Turkey and in other eastern ports by restrictions as to storage and by onerous taxation. For these mischiefs adequate relief is not always afforded by reciprocity treaties like that with Hawaii or that lately negotiated with Mexico and now awaiting the action of the Senate. Is it not advisable to provide some measure of equitable retaliation in our relations with governments which discriminate against our own? If, for example, the Executive were empowered to apply to Spanish vessels and cargoes from Cuba and Puerto Rico the same rules of treatment and scale of penalties for technical faults which are applied to our vessels and cargoes in the Antilles, a resort to that course might not be barren of good results.

If the revenue for the fiscal year which will end on June 30, 1885, be estimated upon the basis of existing laws, the Secretary is of the opinion that for that year the receipts will exceed by $60,000,000 the ordinary expenditures, including the amount devoted to the sinking fund.

Hitherto the surplus as rapidly as it has accumulated has been devoted to the reduction of the national debt.

As a result the only bonds now outstanding which are redeemable at the pleasure of the Government are the 3 percents, amounting to about $305,000,000.

The 4½ percents, amounting to $250,000,000, and the $737,000,000 4 percents are not payable until 1891 and 1907, respectively.

If the surplus shall hereafter be as large as the Treasury estimates now indicate, the 3 per cent. bonds may all be redeemed at least four years before any of the 4½ percents can be called in. The latter at the same rate of accumulation of surplus can be paid at maturity, and the moneys requisite for the redemption of the 4 percents will be in the Treasury many years before those obligations become payable.

There are cogent reasons, however, why the national indebtedness should not be thus rapidly extinguished. Chief among them is the fact that only by excessive taxation is such rapidity attainable.

In a communication to the Congress at its last session I recommended that all excise taxes be abolished except those relating to distilled spirits and that substantial reductions be also made in the revenues from customs. A statute has since been enacted by which the annual tax and tariff receipts of the Government have been cut down to the extent of at least fifty or sixty millions of dollars.

While I have no doubt that still further reductions may be wisely made I do not advise the adoption at this session of any measures for large diminution of the national revenues. The results of the legislation of the last session of the Congress have not as yet become sufficiently apparent to justify any radical revision or sweeping modifications of existing law.

In the interval which must elapse before the effects of the act of March 3, 1883, can be definitely ascertained a portion at least of the surplus revenues may be wisely applied to the long-neglected duty of rehabilitating our Navy and providing coast defenses for the protection of our harbors. This is a matter to which I shall again advert.

Immediately associated with the financial subject just discussed is the important question what legislation is needed regarding the national currency.

The aggregate amount of bonds now on deposit in the Treasury to support the national-bank circulation is about $350,000,000. Nearly $200,000,000 of this amount consists of 3 percents, which, as already stated, are payable at the pleasure of the Government, and are likely to be called in within less than four years unless meantime the surplus revenues shall be diminished.

The probable effect of such an extensive retirement of the securities which are the basis of the national-bank circulation would be such a contraction of the volume of the currency as to produce grave commercial embarrassments.

How can this danger be obviated? The most effectual plan, and one whose adoption at the earliest practicable opportunity I shall heartily approve, has already been indicated.

If the revenues of the next four years shall be kept substantially commensurate with the expenses, the volume of circulation will not be likely to suffer any material disturbance.

But if, on the other hand, there shall be great delay in reducing taxation, it will become necessary either to substitute some other form of currency in place of the national-bank notes or to make important changes in the laws by which their circulation is now controlled.

In my judgment the latter course is far preferable. I commend to your attention the very interesting and thoughtful suggestions upon this subject which appear in the Secretary's report.

The objections which he urges against the acceptance of any other securities than the obligations of the Government itself as a foundation for national-bank circulation seem to me insuperable.

For averting the threatened contraction two courses have been suggested, either of which is probably feasible. One is the issuance of new bonds, having many years to run, bearing a low rate of interest, and exchangeable upon specified terms for those now outstanding. The other course, which commends itself to my own judgment as the better, is the enactment of a law repealing the tax on circulation and permitting the banks to issue notes for an amount equal to 90 per cent. of the market value instead of as now the face value of their deposited bonds. I agree with the Secretary in the belief that the adoption of this plan would afford the necessary relief.

The trade-dollar was coined for the purpose of traffic in countries where silver passed at its value as ascertained by its weight and fineness. It never had a legal-tender quality. Large numbers of these coins entered, however, into the volume of our currency. By common consent their circulation in domestic trade has now ceased, and they have thus become a disturbing element. They should not be longer permitted to embarrass our currency system. I recommend that provision be made for their reception by the Treasury and the mints, as bullion at a small percentage above the current market price of silver of like fineness.

The Secretary of the Treasury advises a consolidation of certain of the customs districts of the country, and suggests that the President be vested with such power in relation thereto as is now given him in respect to collectors of internal revenue by section 3141 of the Revised Statutes. The statistics upon this subject which are contained in his report furnish of themselves a strong argument in defense of his views.

At the adjournment of Congress the number of internal-revenue collection districts was one hundred and twenty-six. By Executive order, dated June 25, 1883, I directed that certain of these districts be consolidated. The result has been a reduction of one-third their number, which at present is but eighty-three.

From the report of the Secretary of War it will be seen that in only a single instance has there been any disturbance of the quiet condition of our Indian tribes. A raid from Mexico into Arizona was made in March last by a small party of Indians, which was pursued by General Crook into the mountain regions from which it had come. It is confidently hoped that serious outbreaks will not again occur and that the Indian tribes which have for so many years disturbed the West will hereafter remain in peaceable submission.

I again call your attention to the present condition of our extended seacoast, upon which are so many large cities whose wealth and importance to the country would in time of war invite attack from modern armored ships, against which our existing defensive works could give no adequate protection. Those works were built before the introduction of modern heavy rifled guns into maritime warfare, and if they are not put in an efficient condition we may easily be subjected to humiliation by a hostile power greatly inferior to ourselves. As germane to this subject, I call your attention to the importance of perfecting our submarine-torpedo defenses. The board authorized by the last Congress to report upon the method which should be adopted for the manufacture of heavy ordnance adapted to modern warfare has visited the principal iron and steel works in this country and in Europe. It is hoped that its report will soon be made, and that Congress will thereupon be disposed to provide suitable facilities and plant for the manufacture of such guns as are now imperatively needed.

On several occasions during the past year officers of the Army have, at the request of the State authorities, visited their militia encampments for inspection of the troops. From the reports of these officers I am induced to believe that the encouragement of the State militia organizations by the National Government would be followed by very gratifying results, and would afford it in sudden emergencies the aid of a large body of volunteers educated in the performance of military duties.

The Secretary of the Navy reports that under the authority of the acts of August 5, 1882 and March 3, 1883, the work of strengthening our Navy by the construction of modern vessels has been auspiciously begun. Three cruisers are in process of construction—the Chicago, of 4,500 tons displacement, and the Boston and Atlanta, each of 2,500 tons. They are to be built of steel, with the tensile strength and ductility prescribed by law, and in the combination of speed, endurance, and armament are expected to compare favorably with the best unarmored war vessels of other nations. A fourth vessel, the Dolphin, is to be constructed of similar material, and is intended to serve as a fleet dispatch boat.

The double-turreted monitors Puritan, Amphitrite, and Terror have been launched on the Delaware River, and a contract has been made for the supply of their machinery. A similar monitor, the Monadnock, has been launched in California.

The naval advisory board and the Secretary recommend the completion of the monitors, the construction of four gunboats, and also of three additional steel vessels like the Chicago, Boston, and Dolphin.

As an important measure of national defense the Secretary urges also the immediate creation of an interior coast-line of water ways across the peninsula of Florida, along the coast from Florida to Hampton Roads, between the Chesapeake Bay and the Delaware River, and through Cape Cod.

I feel bound to impress upon the attention of Congress the necessity of continued progress in the reconstruction of the Navy. The condition of the public Treasury, as I have already intimated, makes the present an auspicious time for putting this branch of the service in a state of efficiency.

It is no part of our policy to create and maintain a Navy able to cope with that of the other great powers of the world.

We have no wish for foreign conquest, and the peace which we have long enjoyed is in no seeming danger of interruption.

But that our naval strength should be made adequate for the defense of our harbors, the protection of our commercial interests, and the maintenance of our national honor is a proposition from which no patriotic citizen can withold his assent.

The report of the Postmaster-General contains a gratifying exhibit of the condition and prospects of the interesting branch of the public service committed to his care.

It appears that on June 30, 1883, the whole number of post-offices was 47,863, of which 1,632 were established during the previous fiscal year. The number of offices operating under the system of free delivery was 154.

At these latter offices the postage on local matter amounted to $4,195,230.52, a sum exceeding by $1,021,894.01 the entire cost of the carrier service of the country.

The rate of postage on drop-letters passing through these offices is now fixed by law at two cents per half ounce or fraction thereof. In offices where the carrier system has not been established the rate is only half as large.

It will be remembered that in 1863, when free delivery was first established by law, the uniform single-rate postage upon local letters was one cent; and so it remained until 1872, when in those cities where carrier service was established it was increased in order to defray the expense of such service.

It seems to me that the old rate may now with propriety be restored, and that, too, even at the risk of diminishing, for a time at least, the receipts from postage upon local letters.

I can see no reason why that particular class of mail matter should be held accountable for the entire cost of not only its own collection and delivery but the collection and delivery of all other classes; and I am confident, after full consideration of the subject, that the reduction of rate would be followed by such a growing accession of business as to occasion but slight and temporary loss to the revenues of the Post-Office. The Postmaster-General devotes much of his report to the consideration, in its various aspects, of the relations of the Government to the telegraph. Such reflection as I have been able to give to this subject since my last annual message has not led me to change the views which I there expressed in dissenting from the recommendation of the then Postmaster-General that the Government assume the same control over the telegraph which it has always exercised over the mail.

Admitting that its authority in the premises is as ample as has ever been claimed for it, it would not, in my judgment, be a wise use of that authority to purchase or assume the control of existing telegraph lines, or to construct others with a view of entering into general competition with private enterprise.

The objections which may be justly urged against either of those projects, and indeed against any system which would require an enormous increase in the civil-service list, do not, however, apply to some of the plans which have lately provoked public comment and discussion. It has been claimed, for example, that Congress might wisely authorize the Postmaster-General to contract with some private persons or corporation for the transmission of messages, or of a certain class of messages, at specified rates and under Government supervision. Various such schemes, of the same general nature but widely differing in their special characteristics, have been suggested in the public prints, and the arguments by which they have been supported and opposed have doubtless attracted your attention.

It is likely that the whole subject will be considered by you at the present session.

In the nature of things it involves so many questions of detail that your deliberations would probably be aided slightly, if at all, by any particular suggestions which I might now submit.

I avow my belief, however, that the Government should be authorized by law to exercise some sort of supervision over interstate telegraphic communication, and I express the hope that for attaining that end some measure may be devised which will receive your approbation.

The Attorney-General criticises in his report the provisions of existing law fixing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the Federal courts. These provisions are chiefly contained in the act of February 26, 1853, though some of them were introduced into that act from statutes which had been passed many years previous. It is manifest that such compensation as might when these laws were enacted have been just and reasonable would in many instances be justly regarded at the present day as inadequate. I concur with the Attorney-General in the belief that the statutes should be revised by which these fees are regulated.

So, too, should the laws which regulate the compensation of district attorneys and marshals. They should be paid wholly by salaries instead of in part by fees, as is now the case.

The change would prove to be a measure of economy, and would discourage the institution of needless and oppressive legal proceedings, which, it is to be feared, have in some instances been conducted for the mere sake of personal gain.

Much interesting and varied information is contained in the report of the Secretary or the Interior.

I particularly call your attention to his presentation of certain phases of the Indian question, to his recommendations for the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture acts, and for more stringent legislation to prevent frauds under the pension laws. The statutes which prescribe the definitions and punishments of crimes relating to pensions could doubtless be made more effective by certain amendments and additions which are pointed out in the Secretary's report.

I have previously referred to the alarming state of illiteracy in certain portions of the country, and again submit for the consideration of Congress whether some Federal aid should not be extended to public primary education wherever adequate provision therefor has not already been made.

The Utah Commission has submitted to the Secretary of the Interior its second annual report. As a result of its labors in supervising the recent election in that Territory, pursuant to the act of March 22, 1882, it appears that persons by that act disqualified to the number of about 12,000 were excluded from the polls. This fact, however, affords little cause for congratulation, and I fear that it is far from indicating any real and substantial progress toward the extirpation of polygamy. All the members-elect of the Legislature are Mormons. There is grave reason to believe that they are in sympathy with the practices that this Government is seeking to suppress, and that its efforts in that regard will be more likely to encounter their opposition than to receive their encouragement and support. Even if this view should happily be erroneous, the law under which the commissioners have been acting should be made more effective by the incorporation of some such stringent amendments as they recommend, and as were included in bill No. 2238 on the Calendar of the Senate at its last session.

I am convinced, however, that polygamy has become so strongly intrenched in the Territory of Utah that it is profitless to attack it with any but the stoutest weapons which constitutional legislation can fashion. I favor, therefore, the repeal of the act upon which the existing government depends, the assumption by the National Legislature of the entire political control of the Territory, and the establishment of a commission with such powers and duties as shall be delegated to it by law.

The Department of Agriculture is accomplishing much in the direction of the agricultural development of the country, and the report of the Commissioner, giving the results of his investigations and experiments, will be found interesting and valuable.

At his instance a convention of those interested in the cattle industry of the country was lately held at Chicago. The prevalence of pleuropneumonia and other contagious diseases of animals was one of the chief topics of discussion. A committee of the convention will invite your co-operation in investigating the causes of these diseases and providing methods for their prevention and cure.

I trust that Congress will not fail at its present session to put Alaska under the protection of law. Its people have repeatedly remonstrated against our neglect to afford them the maintenance and protection expressly guaranteed by the terms of the treaty whereby that Territory was ceded to the United States. For sixteen years they have pleaded in vain for that which they should have received without the asking.

They have no law for the collection of debts, the support of education, the conveyance of property, the administration of estates, or the enforcement of contracts; none indeed for the punishment of criminals, except such as offend against certain customs, commerce and navigation acts.

The resources of Alaska, especially in fur, mines, and lumber, are considerable in extent and capable of large development, while its geographical situation is one of political and commercial importance.

The promptings of interest therefore, as well as considerations of honor and good faith, demand the immediate establishment of civil government in that Territory.

Complaints have lately been numerous and urgent that certain corporations, controlling in whole or in part the facilities for the interstate carriage of persons and merchandise over the great railroads of the country, have resorted in their dealings with the public to divers measures unjust and oppressive in their character.

In some instances the State governments have attacked and suppressed these evils, but in others they have been unable to afford adequate relief because of the jurisdictional limitations which are imposed upon them by the Federal Constitution.

The question how far the National Government may lawfully interfere in the premises, and what, if any, supervision or control it ought to exercise, is one which merits your careful consideration.

While we can not fail to recognize the importance of the vast railway systems of the country and their great and beneficent influences upon the development of our material wealth, we should, on the other hand, remember that no individual and no corporation ought to be invested with absolute power over the interests of any other citizen or class of citizens. The right of these railway corporations to a fair and profitable return upon their investments and to reasonable freedom in their regulations must be recognized; but it seems only just that, so far as its constitutional authority will permit, Congress should protect the people at large in their interstate traffic against acts of injustice which the State governments are powerless to prevent.

In my last annual message I called attention to the necessity of protecting by suitable legislation the forests situated upon the public domain. In many portions of the West the pursuit of general agriculture is only made practicable by resort to irrigation, while successful irrigation would itself be impossible without the aid afforded by forests in contributing to the regularity and constancy of the supply of water.

During the past year severe suffering and great loss of property have been occasioned by profuse floods followed by periods of unusually low water in many of the great rivers of the country.

These irregularities were in great measure caused by the removal from about the sources of the streams in question of the timber by which the water supply had been nourished and protected.

The preservation of such portions of the forests on the national domain as essentially contribute to the equable flow of important water courses is of the highest consequence.

Important tributaries of the Missouri, the Columbia, and the Saskatchewan rise in the mountain region of Montana, near the northern boundary of the United States, between the Blackfeet and Flathead Indian reservations. This region is unsuitable for settlement, but upon the rivers which flow from it depends the future agricultural development of a vast tract of country. The attention of Congress is called to the necessity of withdrawing from public sale this part of the public domain and establishing there a forest preserve.

The industrial exhibitions which have been held in the United States during the present year attracted attention in many foreign countries, where the announcement of those enterprises had been made public through the foreign agencies of this Government. The industrial exhibition at Boston and the Southern exposition at Louisville were largely attended by the exhibitors of foreign countries, notwithstanding the absence of any professed national character in those undertakings.

The centennial exposition to be held next year at New Orleans, in commemoration of the centenary of the first shipment of cotton from a port of the United States, bids fair to meet with like gratifying success. Under the act of Congress of the 10th of February, 1883, declaring that exposition to be national and international in its character, all foreign governments with which the United States maintain relations have been invited to participate.

The promoters of this important undertaking have already received assurances of the lively interest which it has excited abroad.

The report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia is herewith transmitted. I ask for it your careful attention, especially for those portions which relate to assessments, arrears of taxes, and increase of water supply.

The commissioners who were appointed under the act of January 16, 1883, entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," entered promptly upon the discharge of their duties.

A series of rules, framed in accordance with the spirit of the statute, was approved and promulgated by the President.

In some particulars wherein they seemed defective those rules were subsequently amended. It will be perceived that they discountenance any political or religious tests for admission to those offices of the public service to which the statute relates.

The act is limited in its original application to the classified clerkships in the several Executive Departments at Washington (numbering about 5,600) and to similar positions in customs districts and post-offices where as many as fifty persons are employed.

A classification of these positions analogous to that existing in the Washington offices was duly made before the law went into effect.

Eleven customs districts and twenty-three post-offices were thus brought under the immediate operation of the statute.

The annual report of the civil service commission, which will soon be submitted to Congress, will doubtless afford the means of a more definite judgment than I am now prepared to express as to the merits of the new system. I am persuaded that its effects have thus far proved beneficial. Its practical methods appear to be adequate for the ends proposed, and there has been no serious difficulty in carrying them into effect. Since the 16th of July last no person, so far as I am aware, has been appointed to the public service in the classified portions thereof at any of the Departments, or at any of the post-offices and customs districts above named, except those certified by the commission to be the most competent on the basis of the examinations held in conformity to the rules.

At the time when the present Executive entered upon his office his death, removal, resignation, or inability to discharge his duties would have left the Government without a constitutional head.

It is possible, of course, that a similar contingency may again arise unless the wisdom of Congress shall provide against its recurrence.

The Senate at its last session, after full consideration, passed an act relating to this subject, which will now, I trust, commend itself to the approval of both Houses of Congress.

The clause of the Constitution upon which must depend any law regulating the Presidential succession presents also for solution other questions of paramount importance.

These questions relate to the proper interpretation of the phrase "inability to discharge the powers and duties of said office," our organic law providing that, when the President shall suffer from such inability, the Presidential office shall devolve upon the Vice-President, who must himself under like circumstances give place to such officer as Congress may by law appoint to act as President.

I need not here set forth the numerous and interesting inquiries which are suggested by these words of the Constitution. They were fully stated in my first communication to Congress and have since been the subject of frequent deliberations in that body.

It is greatly to be hoped that these momentous questions will find speedy solution, lest emergencies may arise when longer delay will be impossible, and any determination, albeit the wisest, may furnish cause for anxiety and alarm.

For the reasons fully stated in my last annual message I repeat my recommendation that Congress propose an amendment to that provision of the Constitution which prescribes the formalities for the enactment of laws, whereby, in respect to bills for the appropriation of public moneys, the Executive may be enabled, while giving his approval to particular items, to interpose his veto as to such others as do not commend themselves to his judgment.

The fourteenth amendment of the Constitution confers the rights of citizenship upon all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof. It was the special purpose of this amendment to insure to members of the colored race the full enjoyment of civil and political rights.

Certain statutory provisions intended to secure the enforcement of those rights have been recently declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

Any legislation whereby Congress may lawfully supplement the guarantees which the Constitution affords for the equal enjoyment by all the citizens of the United States of every right, privilege, and immunity of citizenship will receive my unhesitating approval.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

WASHINGTON, December 4, 1883.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be laid on the table and printed if there be no objection.

DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual reports of the heads of Departments accompanying the message of the President, which will be laid on the table.

FINANCE REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for the year 1883; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Attorney-General, transmitting the annual report of the Department of Justice for the year 1883; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator withdraw that motion for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask leave to submit the following resolution, and ask for immediate action upon it:

Resolved, That there be printed 500 copies of the testimony taken by the Select Committee on the Mississippi River Improvements.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

FEES OF PENSION SURGEONS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire, if the Senate will hear me at this time, to introduce a joint resolution which ought to be acted upon very promptly.

There is now no provision for the payment of the pension examining surgeons, and there is a deficiency of over $400,000 in that branch of the service. The Commissioner of Pensions is very anxious that prompt action be taken on the subject. I have here a joint resolution which proposes not to appropriate money, but simply to pay what is due from appropriations already made for this branch of the Government.

The Commissioner says that there is great embarrassment in the conduct of the business of the Pension Office, resulting in some degree from the multiplication especially of applications for increase which have been started almost since the publication of the list of pensioners throughout the country, amounting to over five thousand a month for the past month or so, which makes it necessary to have a large increase of examinations. Each case requires an expenditure of $6, and these examinations ought to be promptly made, because if the pension is allowed it dates from the date of the examination.

The joint resolution provides for the payment of fees of examining surgeons or physicians for the years ending June 30, 1883 and 1884. I ask that it lie on the table for the present, and that it be considered as promptly as may be by the Committee on Appropriations.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 6) providing for the payment of fees to examining surgeons of pensioners for the years ending June 30, 1883 and 1884; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations when appointed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 4, 1883.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. There is pending before the House a matter of privilege, of the highest privilege, submitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE]. After that matter has been disposed of the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I did not know but what I might be recognized now, the gentleman from Ohio not having claimed the floor.

MISSISSIPPI CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. CONVERSE. I am requested by Mr. Manning to ask unanimous consent of the House that the question of his prima facie right to a seat on this floor be referred to the standing Committee on Elections when appointed, with instructions to report thereon at the earliest day possible.

Mr. KEIFER. Will not the gentleman also ask the same privilege for Mr. Chalmers?

Mr. CONVERSE. I am willing that his papers shall go to the committee also.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the proposition is that all the papers shall be referred to that committee.

Mr. KEIFER. And let the question of the prima facie right of Mr. Chalmers to the seat go with that of Mr. Manning.

Mr. CONVERSE. We will not object on this side.

Mr. REED. Why not adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] to refer the case of both contestants to the Committee on Elections? I am sure the gentleman will recognize the fairness of that proposition.

Mr. KEIFER. He can trust that committee.

Mr. CONVERSE. I have no right to speak for Mr. Chalmers; his case is not before the House. I simply desire——

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is mistaken. The papers are in the hands of the Clerk. We desire that all the papers be referred.

Mr. CONVERSE. I am willing, of course, to embrace in my proposition the request that the papers shall go to that committee when appointed. But I desire that only the question of the prima facie right to a seat shall now be submitted with instructions to the standing Committee on Elections when appointed.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the prima facie right of both gentlemen go there.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not see how we can send half of this case to the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. Let us send it all.

Mr. COX, of New York. One question carries with it the other. Let all the papers go there.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is good sense and good practice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will state his motion again, or perhaps it had better be put in writing, so that there may be no mistake about it.

Mr. CONVERSE. I believe the Clerk has it down, but I will restate it. I ask unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. Manning, that the question of his right prima facie to a seat upon this floor be referred to the Committee on Elections when appointed, with instructions to report at the earliest day possible, and I will embrace in my proposition——

Mr. KEIFER. Does not the gentleman include in it the prima facie right of Mr. Chalmers?

Mr. CONVERSE. I will embrace in my proposition the suggestion that the papers which have been filed with the Clerk be directed to be placed in the hands of the committee when appointed.

Mr. KEIFER. But let the other case go there, too, as suggested by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MORRISON. There is not any other case.

Mr. KEIFER. There is another case. The papers on file with the Clerk show the fact——

Mr. CONVERSE. Then I desire the committee of course to report upon it. If they report in favor of Mr. Chalmers, of course that will cover the other question. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. KEIFER. The objection we make is that it is proposed to refer the prima facie right of one gentleman only, not both. By the papers here—by the certificates from the secretary of state of Mississippi—the result of the vote is shown absolutely. Let both cases go to the committee. They can be trusted to report upon the question whether Mr. Chalmers or Mr. Manning is entitled to the seat——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Prima facie.

Mr. KEIFER. Prima facie.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all fair.

Mr. KEIFER. That is all we ask. If the gentleman will include the two we make no further objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is agreed.

The SPEAKER. Of course if there is objection this debate is out of order. The Chair is indulging it upon the supposition that some agreement may be arrived at.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We are all agreed.

Mr. KEIFER. It is stated on the other side that the two cases are not here. I am informed that the certificate from the secretary of state of Mississippi—probably the only officer in the State authorized to make a certificate; we do not concede that the governor is authorized to make a certificate, and he does not himself claim that he is—the certificate of the secretary of state regularly and properly filed here——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to further debate.

Mr. KEIFER. I supposed it was in order to debate the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] proposes to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution which will be read, after which any objection, if made, will be entertained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the certificate and all other papers in the contested-election case of J. R. Chalmers vs. Van H. Manning, from the second Congressional district of the State of Mississippi, be referred to the Committee on Elections when appointed, with instructions to report immediately whether, upon the prima facie case as presented by said papers, said Manning is entitled to be sworn in as a member pending the contest on the merits, and not to affect the final right to said seat.

Mr. CALKINS. I object to that resolution unless it be modified so as to read, "said Manning or said Chalmers."

Mr. BLACKBURN (to Mr. CONVERSE). Put that in.

Mr. CONVERSE. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio states that he has no objection to the modification.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the resolution be modified and then read again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the certificate and all other papers in the contested-election case of J. R. Chalmers vs. Van H. Manning, from the second Congressional district of the State of Mississippi, be referred to the Committee on Elections when appointed, with instructions to report immediately whether, upon the prima facie case as presented by said papers, said Manning or Chalmers is entitled to be sworn in as a member pending the contest on the merits, and not to affect the final right to said seat.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

SWEARING IN OF DELEGATES.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I desire to submit a resolution for adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the organization of the House is not yet complete, as the Delegates have not been sworn in. But the gentleman's resolution can be considered if there be unanimous consent.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I will withhold it for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri at the proper time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] offered a resolution yesterday, which was withdrawn for the purpose of hearing the question just disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. It was withheld for the purpose of having the Delegates of the Territories sworn in. It was done at the suggestion of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll of Delegates.

The roll-call showed the presence of the following Delegates:

Arizona—Granville H. Oury.
Idaho—Theodore F. Singiser.
Montana—Martin Maginnis.
New Mexico—Tranquilino Luna.
Utah—John T. Caine.
Washington—Thomas H. Brents.
Wyoming—Morton E. Post.

Mr. JOHN B. RAYMOND, of Dakota, did not respond when his name was called.

The Delegates present appeared, and Mr. OURY took the oath prescribed by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes, and the others, respectively, the oath prescribed by section 1756 of the Revised Statutes.

KANSAS CONTESTED CASE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has a motion pending in reference to an election case, which was suspended for the purpose of administering the oath of office to the Delegates from the Territories.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now submit the resolution which was read yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the memorial of the governor of the State of Kansas, and of other officers and citizens in said State, and all papers presented to the Clerk in reference to the election and qualification of Hon. S. R. Peters, of said State, be referred to the Committee on Elections when appointed, with instructions to report to the House, at the earliest time practicable, whether Mr. Peters is eligible to a seat in this House; and if not, whether Hon. S. N. Wood, the contestant, is entitled to the seat.

Mr. SPRINGER. On the adoption of that resolution I demand the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, is this proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is a matter of privilege, relating as it does to the right of a member to his seat.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Is the same privilege extended to the reference of the papers on the other side of the case?

The SPEAKER. Not as a matter of course, as there must be action of the House in each and every case.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-seventh Congress be the rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress until the expiration of two weeks from the date of the appointment of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I demand the previous question on the adoption of that resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri why he has changed the usual form of the resolution. It is always in the power of the House to adopt the rules for the time being, and that has been our custom. It is always in the power of the House to change them subsequently. I would inquire whether it is not better to follow the precedent that the rules of the last Congress be the rules of this until otherwise ordered. That conforms to the usage, and this fixing a precise time, which may be forgotten or overlooked, it seems to me is unnecessary and I think unusual.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that I do not know the practice has been uniform in the House or that any particular language has been used in the adoption of the rules. But it has been suggested to me that the Committee on Rules within two weeks after their appointment will submit to the House a resolution either to continue the rules of the Forty-seventh Congress during this session or this Congress or with such modification as they may be pleased to suggest.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman is aware that, being a privileged committee, it can report at any time.

Mr. MORRISON. We all know that.

Mr. KASSON. The difficulty is that we may find ourselves from forgetfulness, just two weeks after the committee has been appointed, without any rules at all.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I undertake to say that the Committee on Rules when appointed will not forget so important a matter as this. I insist on my demand for the previous question.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to make an inquiry of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to know whether or not this resolution is debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not at this time.

Mr. BELFORD. I wanted a decision of the Speaker upon the subject——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman who offers the resolution has demanded the previous question, and the only question now before the House is, Shall the previous question be ordered? If that demand is not sustained the Chair will then decide whether or not the resolution is open for debate.

The question is, Shall the previous question be now ordered?

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUNN. In this same connection I ask that the resolution which I now send to the desk may be read, and, by unanimous consent, printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Rules when organized.

The SPEAKER. This can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNN. I will state to the House that the only object of the resolution——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives be amended as follows, namely:

In Rule 10, after the words "on commerce, to consist of fifteen members," add "on rivers and harbors, to consist of fifteen members."

Amend paragraph 7 of rule 11 so as to read as follows:

"To commerce, life-saving service, and light- houses, other than appropriations for life-saving service and light-houses, to the Committee on Commerce."

And insert next thereafter the following paragraph:

"To the improvement of rivers and harbors to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have the same privilege in reporting bills, making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills."

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The first question is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I object to the resolution until there be a completed organization of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated distinctly that this resolution would require unanimous consent. There being objection, of course it is not before the House.

Mr. DUNN. Let me state to the gentleman from Indiana that this resolution affects the organization of the House——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I must object to it at present.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The resolution is, therefore, not before the House.

ELECTION OF CLERK, SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, ETC.

Mr. GEDDES. I now desire to submit and move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John B. Clark, jr., of the State of Missouri, be, and is hereby, elected Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress.

That John P. Leedom, of the State of Ohio, be, and is hereby, elected Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress.

That James G. Wintersmith, of the State of Texas, be, and is hereby, elected Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress.

That Lycurgus Dalton, of the State of Indiana, be, and is hereby, elected Postmaster of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress; and

That Rev. John S. Lindsay, of the District of Columbia, be, and is hereby, elected Chaplain of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a division of the resolution and a separate vote. Section 30 of the Revised Statutes contemplates the election of a Clerk before proceeding with other business. And I offer as an amendment to the first portion of the resolution what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is of course entitled to a division of the resolution if he desires it. Does the gentleman demand a division?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEDDES. That proposition is cheerfully accepted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the resolution the name of John B. Clark, jr., of the State of Missouri, and insert the name of Edward McPherson, of the State of Pennsylvania.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is now before the House——

Mr. CANNON. I believe the statute contemplates that the Clerk shall be first sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will be sworn in as soon as the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio is adopted. The question is now upon agreeing to the first part of the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Ohio.

The first branch of the resolution, relating to the election of Clerk, was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I offer now as an amendment to the second part of the resolution the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

For Sergant-at-Arms, strike out the name of John P. Leedom, of the State of Ohio, and insert the name of George W. Hooker, of the State of Vermont.

For Doorkeeper, strike out the name of James G. Wintersmith, of the State of Texas, and insert the name of Walter P. Brownlow, of the State of Tennessee.

For Postmaster, strike out the name of Lycurgus Dalton, of the State of Indiana, and insert the name of George McNeir, of the State of Minnesota.

For Chaplain, strike out the name of John S. Lindsay, of the District of Columbia, and insert the name of Frederick D. Power, of the State of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring upon the second branch of the resolution as proposed by Mr. GEDDES, it was agreed to.

Messrs. CLARK, LEEDOM, WINTERSMITH, DALTON, and LINDSAY, having presented themselves at the Clerk's desk, were duly qualified, Messrs. CLARK, WINTERSMITH, and LINDSAY taking the modified oath, and Messrs. LEEDOM and DALTON the oath prescribed by section 1756 of the Revised Statutes.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. CURTIN. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed on the part of the House, to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints, as the committee to join the committee on the part of the Senate to wait on the President, Mr. CURTIN of Pennsylvania, Mr. BLACKBURN of Kentucky, and Mr. HISCOCK of New York.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate informing that body that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled, and that JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, has been elected Speaker, and that JOHN B. CLARK, jr., a citizen of the State of Missouri, has been chosen Clerk, and that the House of Representatives is ready to proceed to business.

The resolution was adopted.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. DUNN. I now renew my request for the reference to the Committee on Rules, when appointed, of the resolution which I sent up a short time ago. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] has withdrawn his objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas renews his request for unanimous consent to introduce and have referred to the Committee on Rules, when appointed, the resolution which he has sent to the desk.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I understand that the resolution will provoke no discussion, but will be simply referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DUNN. That is the understanding, and I desire to have the resolution printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the resolution will be printed in the RECORD, and will be referred to the Committee on Rules when appointed.

There was no objection.

[The resolution appears in a former part of the proceedings.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask that it take the same course, and be referred to the Committee on Rules when appointed.

Mr. VALENTINE. I object to this or any other resolution until we have disposed of the next business in order, which is the drawing of seats.

DRAWING FOR SEATS.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the consideration of the resolution sent up by the gentleman from Kentucky. The next business in order is the drawing of seats.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask that Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY be allowed to select his seat before the regular drawing begins.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that Hon. SAMUEL S. COX be permitted to select his seat before the drawing begins.

The SPEAKER. After the Clerk has reported the rule under which the drawing takes place these requests may be entertained.

Mr. KELLEY. I have been on my feet for the purpose of asking whether some provision should not be made for the three members of the committee appointed to wait on the President, or whether the execution of the duty intrusted to them should not be postponed until after the drawing. It does not seem right to send three gentlemen out of the House to execute its order and then proceed to draw for seats in their absence.

The SPEAKER. The House has heard the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. What is the pleasure of the House?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentlemen appointed on the committee have not left the Hall. They might draw their seats before going.

Mr. CALKINS. I suggest that each of those gentlemen shall choose a page and let the pages select the seats in their absence when the names of the gentlemen are called.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to call the attention of the House to the terms of the rule——

The SPEAKER. The Speaker has directed the rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXII.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

At the commencement of each Congress, immediately after the Members and Delegates are sworn in, the Clerk shall place in a box, prepared for that purpose, a number of small balls of marble or other material equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be consecutively numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box, and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on a numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

2. Before said drawing shall commence each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished, and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn, no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during that Congress.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to call the attention of the Chair and the Clerk to the fact that I have noticed in preceding Congresses the Clerk has called the roll so fast that when a ball is taken from the box and the name is called, if the gentleman is back against the wall and has to work through the crowd, somebody else has his name called and gets a prior choice, so that the gentleman whose name is earlier called does not get the benefit to which he is entitled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to have the names called slowly.

Mr. SCALES. I ask that the name of Mr. Thomas G. Skinner, my colleague from the first district of North Carolina, be put in the box. His certificate of election is on the way here; but he has not been fortunate enough to receive it as yet. I make this request in order that his seat may be selected when the drawing takes place.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES]?

Mr. REED. I have been informed that the gentleman referred to is not entitled to a seat under the decisions which the House has hitherto made. If that is the case, there would seem to be a decided impropriety in permitting him to make a choice of his seat.

Mr. SPRINGER. The decisions to which the gentleman refers do not apply to this case.

Mr. REED. I understand that they do.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman has been elected to fill a vacancy.

Mr. REED. I understand he has been elected from one district to fill a vacancy in another.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. REED. And the House has passed upon that a number of times and always in one way. And if that is the case, there would be a manifest impropriety in the gentleman being permitted to draw for a seat.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman presents a prima facie certificate he will be entitled to be sworn in upon it; and this would simply recognize the fact that he is prepared to present such a certificate.

Mr. REED. I must object.

Mr. SCALES. Is unanimous consent required?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that unanimous consent is required. The House can not decide upon the right of this gentleman to his seat until he presents his credentials.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I desire to state to the House that my colleague, Mr. CLARDY, is detained at home on account of serious illness. He has been sick for about three weeks, confined to his bed. I ask unanimous consent of the House that when his name is called one of his colleagues may be permitted to select a seat for him.

Many MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. My colleague, Mr. HAMMOND, is very sick at the Metropolitan Hotel, in this city, and unable to be present here to-day. I ask that I be allowed to select a seat for him when his name is called. I do so at his request.

Mr. TUCKER. I suggest that in the case of any gentleman who is absent on account of sickness some friend be allowed to select a seat for him when his name is called.

Many MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] suggests that in all cases of absence on account of sickness the seats for such members be selected by friends when their names are called. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. KELLEY. I suggest that there be a list made of those who are known to be absent on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will request members to hand in the names of such to the Clerk.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to renew the motion intimated before the rule was read, to grant to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLEY, and to the gentleman from New York, Mr. COX, the two oldest members of the House, the privilege of selecting their seats before the drawing commences; that is one on each side of the House.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I suggest that that motion be amended, so as to include the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL, ex-Speaker of this House.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLEY, the gentleman from New York, Mr. COX, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL, be allowed to select their seats in advance of the drawing. Is there objection to that?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to add the name of Mr. KEIFER, of Ohio, the Speaker of the last House.

The SPEAKER. Is that suggestion adopted?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If there be any members of the House permitted to select their seats in advance of the regular drawing, to which I have no objection, I desire to request that, in consequence of his infirmity, of which the House is well aware, the name of the gentleman from New York, Mr. ROBINSON, be added, so that he may be able to select a seat where he can hear something of the business of the House as it is being transacted.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I believe that none of these suggestions are in order except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. None of them.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It has been suggested by gentlemen that this courtesy be accorded to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLEY, and the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. COX, which suggestion was assented to very cheerfully on this side of the House. Now, if the House will pardon me, members will recollect that at the first session of the last Congress similar propositions were made, and a number of names were suggested. The result was that the House refused to accord the privilege to any gentleman.

Then, on our side of the House, by unanimous consent, the hat of Mr. KELLEY was placed on his desk, and all of us respected the selection, and he was accorded the seat which he desired. Now we are entirely willing that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLEY, with any gentleman who may be selected from the other side of the House, the gentleman from New York, Mr. COX, or the other distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL, or, if it is desired, that the two gentlemen on that side be allowed this privilege. Then I am willing that the same privilege shall be accorded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLEY, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KEIFER, ex-Speaker of this House. But if the privilege is to be extended beyond that number, then I shall object, and we will take care of our own men on this side of the House.

Mr. MILLS. Then I object now.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made and the proposition is not agreed to.

Mr. SCALES. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. I understand that that gentleman, who objected to my request a few moments since, withdraws his objection. I ask if the objection is withdrawn?

Many MEMBERS. "Regular order!" "Regular order!"

Mr. SCALES. I ask that the name of Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina, be placed on the list.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES]?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule members of the House will now please retire to the lobby.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Or what is in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry. There are so many more gentlemen on that side than there are on this, we wish to know what seats they propose or desire to occupy on this side of the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no information on that subject.

The drawing of the seats was then proceeded with, beginning at 1 o'clock, the name of Mr. DUNCAN, of Illinois, being first called, and concluding at 6 minutes after 2 o'clock, the name of Mr. LOVERING, of Massachusetts, being the last called.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House take a recess for twenty minutes, my object being to await the arrival of the President's message, which, as I am informed, is to be sent in to-day. It is proper that it should be read immediately upon its reception.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Several members objected.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better take a recess.

COMMITTEE ON MILEAGE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, announced the appointment of the following as members of the Committee on Mileage:

Mr. MOULTON of Illinois, Mr. WELLBORN of Texas, Mr. GLASCOCK of California, Mr. RANNEY of Massachusetts, and Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess for twenty minutes.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move a further recess for half an hour.

The motion was agreed to.

The recess having expired, the House, at 3 o'clock p. m., resumed its session.

MESSENGER TO REPORTERS OF DEBATES.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Philip V. McElhone at the rate of $1,000 per annum during the present session of Congress for services as messenger to the official reporters of debates; and that the same be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. COBB. I hope the gentleman who introduces the resolution will explain it. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will make his explanation, after which objection can be made.

Mr. COBB. Is this messenger for the stenographers at the desk here?

Mr. CANNON. It is the usual resolution.

Mr. COBB. Very well; I have no objection. I simply wanted to understand the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VIRGINIA ELECTION CONTEST.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, in the contested-election case of Mayo and Garrison, Mr. Mayo took his seat the other day. I desire to present certain papers in connection with the return in that case and to offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the certificates and all other papers relating to the election of a Representative of the first Congressional district of Virginia in the Forty-eighth Congress be referred to the Committee on Elections when appointed, with instructions to report at as early a day as practicable which of the rival claimants to the seat from that district has the prima facie right thereto, reserving to the other party the privilege of contesting the case upon the merits.

Mr. TUCKER. Upon the adoption of that resolution I demand the previous question.

Mr. KEIFER. This resolution is very unusual.

Mr. TUCKER. Not at all.

Mr. KEIFER. The memorial would be referred as a matter of course; but the gentleman desires that this case be selected out from all the other cases and reported upon, whether it is ready or not to be considered in advance of them.

Mr. TUCKER. There is nothing in the resolution but that the committee report as soon as practicable.

The SPEAKER. The language of the resolution is that the committee shall "report at as early a day as practicable."

Mr. KEIFER. That is not the whole resolution. It proposes to require that the prima facie case be examined into; and that is very unusual.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Upon this resolution the gentleman from Virginia demands the previous question.

Mr. KEIFER. I should like to have the resolution read again.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, the question of the prima facie right to the seat has been already settled by the House and Mr. Mayo sworn in.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] allow this matter to be suspended for one moment, that a report may be received from a committee?

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Speaker, the committee charged, in connection with a similar committee on the part of the Senate, with the duty of informing the President of the United States that the two Houses of Congress are organized and ready to receive any communication he may desire to make, report that they have performed the duty, and are directed by the President to say that he will make a communication in writing to Congress immediately.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

VIRGINIA ELECTION CONTEST.

The SPEAKER. Upon the resolution which has been read the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] demands the previous question.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether as a matter of law the prima facie right in this case is not already settled by the action of the House in swearing in one of the claimants to the seat upon the title he presented.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not a parliamentary inquiry; it is a question for the House to decide in voting upon the resolution. All that the Chair can determine is that this is a matter of privilege and in order at any time. The House of course must dispose of the proposition upon such reasons as may govern the votes of members.

Mr. CALKINS. But if the Chair will hear me a moment——

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Mayo was directed to be sworn in because his name was on the roll, he having come here with a regular certificate. The facts which I have presented to-day show that the regular certificate ought not to have been awarded to him. I desire that the Committee on Elections shall examine into the question.

The SPEAKER. This matter is not debatable, the gentleman from Virginia himself having demanded the previous question. But the Chair will, of course, answer any parliamentary question.

Mr. CALKINS. The precedent is what I am looking after. I wish to state that within the range of my knowledge——

Mr. TUCKER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] states that he desires to submit a parliamentary question.

Mr. CALKINS. Within the range of my knowledge of all the election contests that have taken place in this House I do not now recollect any resolution introduced here and adopted by the House directing an inquiry into the prima facie right of a member to hold a seat after he had been sworn in on the credentials presented and thus become a member of the House.

The SPEAKER. But that is not a question for the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CALKINS. But this is the point for the decision of the Chair to which I am coming, whether, this being a resolution asking this House to determine a question which has already been determined by the House, that can be done in this manner. Can we open up by a simple resolution what has already been determined by the House?

The SPEAKER. The point suggested by the gentleman from Indiana may be of such a character as to induce the House not to pass the resolution, but it does not pertain to any question of order for the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CALKINS. I appeal to the gentleman from Virginia not to press this resolution for adoption until the matter can be fully inquired into.

Mr. TUCKER. That is exactly what I desire to have done—to authorize and instruct the Committee on Elections to examine into and report upon the matter without delay.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not believe it is the purpose of the gentleman from Virginia or that it is his desire that this House should take a step that has neither precedent nor law to sustain it. I ask him to let the matter lie over until to-morrow, so that we can examine it.

Mr. MAYO. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. This matter is not debatable if the gentleman from Virginia insists upon the demand for the previous question.

Mr. MAYO. I rise for the purpose of asking a question.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MAYO. I do not propose to debate it, but to ask a question of my colleague here from Virginia. I am the party interested in the matter, and I simply want to ask a question, which I hope he will answer.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAGAN. I insist that this debate is entirely out of order, the previous question having been demanded, and the asking of questions is in the nature of debate.

The SPEAKER. Of course propounding a question to a gentleman on the floor is in the nature of debate. Objection having been made, the Chair must sustain it.

The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken.

Mr. CALKINS. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 134, noes 103.

So, no further count being demanded, the previous question was ordered.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Speaker, we desire on our part to debate this question. Do gentlemen on the other side desire to be heard first, under the rule?

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir.

Mr. KEIFER. Then we simply want to emphasize the effect of the proposition submitted here, perhaps for the first time in the history of Congressional legislation. This is a proposition to unseat a man after he has been sworn in; after being put upon the rolls regularly by the Clerk in the manner prescribed by the law, and after the House has permitted the man to come before its bar and take the oath of office required by the law. It is proposed now to go back of all this and adopt the peculiarly absurd idea which this resolution contemplates, to wit, to authorize a committee of the House to examine into the question of the prima facie case, which has been already determined through all the forms of law and with the consent of the whole House.

No case, I believe, unless the gentleman from Virginia has been able to find some precedent which has been overlooked—but certainly no case has arisen within my knowledge where it has been proposed to ask or authorize the Committee on Elections to investigate the prima facie case after the House has determined it.

Now, what we want to look at in this connection is as to what can be done by the committee if this resolution be adopted. Suppose under these instructions proposed to be given to them they examine first the certificate presented here by Mr. Mayo from the governor of Virginia and find it to be regular in form and so report? That makes the prima facie case. The Clerk of the House was justified under that certificate in putting the name of this man upon the rolls; and suppose the committee further find that the House was justified in permitting him to be sworn in. Then they propose to look at something else and see if there is not another prima facie case for somebody else. Suppose they should find it on some form of certificate? Then there would be a question of prima facie cases—one that had been settled by the House and the other not. That is the effect. It is proposed to give the Committee on Elections power to report back as soon as possible a question that has been already determined by the House and to ask the House to order a man out of his seat before the contest upon the regular notice that has been served and the answer. To do that, Mr. Speaker, would deprive the sitting member of the power of making any contest at all. He could not file the notice, because the statute has run until the time has been exhausted. There is no longer a chance or opportunity for him to file a notice of contest, and there would be no contest for the seat upon the merits. But the House having put the man in here on the authority of the certificate given by the governor of the State of Virginia the contestant is given his notice, answers have been filed, testimony has been taken, and everything done in proper form for the committee to examine the case upon its merits.

I would not object to a resolution that would refer all of the papers in the case—papers of every kind and character, memorials that may be presented hereafter, and all proper documents bearing upon the subject—to the Committee on Elections. If that committee wants to be vigilant, prompt, and active in its reviewal of the case I should not object. But this man, already sworn in, whose title to his seat is apparently as good as that of any other member here, is to be unseated on a prima facie case and forever debarred under our statute of the right of contest. This is a case so entirely at variance with precedents that I ask the House to hesitate and consider carefully before it undertakes to adopt the resolution and put another gentleman into that position. I do not mean to be understood as saying that that is the purpose of the gentleman from Virginia; I do not mean to say that it is his wish to avoid dealing with the case upon its merits. But that is the effect of the resolution if adopted and carried out by the Committee on Elections.

If there is any further time I desire to reserve it until I hear from the other side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has seven minutes' time remaining.

Mr. KEIFER. I will reserve that time.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether he said the facts assumed in that resolution exist. The resolution in its character and import is to the effect that there is a question as to who has the prima facie title to this seat. I ask the gentleman whether there is a question as to who has the prima facie title to the seat occupied by the gentleman from the first district?

Mr. TUCKER. I answer my colleague, yes.

Mr. MAYO rose.

Mr. TUCKER. How much time has been taken up in the debate already?

The SPEAKER. The rule allows only thirty minutes for debate; fifteen minutes on each side. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], who controls the time on that side, has seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Virginia I hope will yield five minutes of his time to me.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, then, recognizes the gentleman from Illinois for five minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I understand in this case Mr. Garrison has made contest as to his prima facie right to this seat as well as to his right on the merits of the case. Now, under the Constitution of the United States, this House is the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. It is necessary in the first instance to give to some other power the granting of certificates of membership, but now that this House is organized, and this is the House of Representatives, it is the judge of everything which pertains to the right of a member to a seat on this floor.

It has got to be too common, Mr. Speaker, for returning boards in the States to throw out indiscriminately precincts and counties, as was done in this case, in order to accomplish a partisan purpose. I hold this House can not be estopped from inquiring into the legality of those proceedings as well as into the question as to the merits of the case finally. In the case before this House I understand one whole county was disfranchised by the arbitrary act of a returning board, and so arbitrary was it, that the governor himself, a partisan of the contestee in this case, refused to be a party to it. Will this House therefore allow a returning board in one of the States to usurp the authority which it has under the Constitution of the United States, and disfranchise whole communities in the granting of a prima facie certificate; and when the question is brought here are we to refuse to meet that question to determine who ought to have had that certificate in the first instance? If there ever was a case where a claimant for a seat on this floor was entitled to a certificate in the first instance, that case is now before this House and covered by this resolution. If there ever was an unauthorized and arbitrary exercise of quasi-judicial power it was in the case of these returning boards in Virginia, and this House will do injustice to the rightful claimant to a seat on this floor if he shall be kept out until the merits of the case can be inquired into.

Mr. J. S. WISE rose.

Mr. KEIFER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. J. S. WISE. I should like to have five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio controls the time on that side.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the gentleman from Virginia desires to be heard.

Mr. J. S. WISE. I do, and I ask the gentleman to yield to me for two minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly, I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. J. S. WISE. Now, Mr. Speaker, the assumptions of the last speaker are based on facts which are not in the record, and the conclusions of the speaker reach to the point of deciding a case before it has been heard. The only case in Virginia in which the question of returning boards has ever been before this House was the case of Platt against Goode, where Platt, who was elected by an undisputed majority, was thrown out, the Democratic House letting Goode retain the seat during the whole session, and then, against the report of the majority of the committee, seating Goode and depriving Platt of it. It comes with an ill-grace, therefore, from the other side to make any statement of that kind here that frauds of returning boards are becoming too common in Virginia.

Mr. MAYO. Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to be heard in my own behalf before this House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio who demanded the debate is entitled under the usage of the House to control the time on that side.

Mr. TUCKER. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the legal proposition?

Mr. MAYO. I only wish two minutes of the gentleman's time.

Mr. KEIFER. I will yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MAYO. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] if the certificate which he has, that allowed him to be sworn in, is not identical with the certificate upon which I have been sworn in? Upon that certificate I stand here before this House as the accredited Representative of the first Congressional district of Virginia. Under the sign manual of my State I am here. And I ask in common justice to myself that in acting upon this matter you shall deal with me, not as belonging to a different political party from the majority of this House, but that you shall deal with me fairly, squarely, and justly. That is all I ask of this House.

I have taken my testimony. It is going to be before your committee. Do not in advance prejudge the case. If you do, I shall be sorry to say that I belong to a body of men who so far forgot what was right and just that they decided in advance a case simply because they had a majority in that body. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KEIFER. If I have any further time I yield it to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS].

Mr. CALKINS. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to appeal again to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] not to establish a precedent of this kind, which will be a dangerous precedent for the seat of every man in this House. Majorities often change. We ought to live and act by precedents.

It is true, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has said, the Constitution provides that each House shall be judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. But there is another clause of the Constitution which declares that we shall decide our mode of procedure; that is, by rules. We have adopted rules under the Constitution; and one of our rules provides that these election contests, made up in accordance with the statute, shall go to the Committee on Elections, who shall report who is entitled to the seat.

Then Congress has passed a law that the Clerk of the House shall make up a roll of members. I desire to read it. It is as follows:

In making out the roll of members-elect at the first meeting of a Congress the Clerk of the next preceding House shall place thereon the names of those persons, and of such persons only, whose credentials show that they were regularly elected in accordance with the laws of their States respectively or the laws of the United States.

I am reading from the law as it is quoted in the Digest. The Clerk, then, is the person to whom this Congress has committed the right to decide upon the prima facie title of a member-elect, unless something intervenes requiring him to submit the question to the House. And I say, after the Clerk has made up that roll under this law passed by Congress and a man is sworn at the bar of the House, the prima facie case is res adjudicata, and no committee can go back to determine it. To declare that it can, for the first time in a hundred years, would be establishing a precedent that would endanger the seat of every man in the House. The resolution is one which the House should not adopt.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman consent to let this matter go over till to-morrow or else submit to a motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Elections when appointed, so that we may have time to consider the subject in all its bearings?

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it go over till to-morrow.

Mr. TUCKER. I have no objection to letting it go over till to-morrow, so that the President's message may now be laid before the House. I believe I have ten minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER. This is a question of privilege, and of course can be called up at any time. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] allows the resolution to go over till to-morrow.

CONTESTED ELECTION—ENGLISH VS. PEELLE.

Mr. COBB presented papers in the contested-election case of English vs. Peelle, seventh Congressional district of Indiana; which were ordered to be referred to the Committee on Elections when appointed.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual message of the President of the United States; which was read.

(For message see proceedings of Senate.)

Mr. MORRISON. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the message of the President be committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying documents, be printed.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORRISON. I offer also the resolution which I send to the desk, for reference to the Committee on Printing when appointed.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from Edward McPherson, Clerk of the late House of Representatives, transmitting a report of expenditures from June 30, 1882, to June 30, 1883; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORT OF PUBLIC PRINTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Public Printer, transmitting the annual report of his office for the year ending June 30, 1883; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed, to be referred to the Committee on Printing when appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRIS. I present a number of petitions of citizens of Tennessee of the same character, each of which I desire to have referred to the Committee on Claims. The petitions, which are quite numerous, pray for indemnity for loss of property during the late war, but the indorsement on one is substantially, if not literally, the indorsement upon all of them. Without consuming time in reading the indorsement on the various petitions I ask that they lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will lie upon the table, and be referred to the Committee on Claims when appointed.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of David S. Carrick, Andrew M. Robinson, Harry R. Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the National Division of the Sons of Temperance, numbering 70,000 members, officially signed, praying for the creation of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Finance when appointed.

Mr. BLAIR. I present two joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, and ask that they be read and referred, respectively, to the proper committees when organized.

The joint resolution against land subsidies to railroads was read, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands when appointed, as follows:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
Office of Secretary of State, Concord.

Joint resolution against land subsidies to railroads.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives in General Court convened, That whereas the Government of the United States has given to the railroads 178,952,688 acres of land, an area equal to thirty times the State of New Hampshire, and comprising the best lands of our national domain, the land grants in many cases being over 25,000 acres to every mile of railroad constructed; and

Whereas if such grants were ever proper that necessity has passed away, and many of the roads recently built are uncalled for, far in advance of any public need, and projected and constructed mainly to gain possession of immense tracts of land to enrich a few men, who monopolize the best sections, holding them for a rise, or to exact unreasonable prices from settlers, against the public welfare; and

Whereas the public lands are the property of the whole people, held in trust for the benefit of the whole people, and when sold they should be sold in such quantities and on such terms as to encourage settlement and improvement, and not be given to large corporations nor in any other way squandered: Therefore,

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives be requested to oppose any further land subsidies to railroads except the right of way, and any land grants for any purpose except for objects of national importance; and, especially, to oppose any renewal of forfeited land grants.

Resolved further, That his excellency the governor be requested to send copies of this joint resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives, and to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, at the opening of the next session of our national Congress.

Approved September 7, 1883.

The joint resolution in favor of a Government postal telegraph system was read, and ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads when appointed, as follows:

Joint resolution in favor of a Government postal telegraph system.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives in General Court convened, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives be requested to use all their influence towards the early establishment of a Government postal telegraph system.

Resolved further, That his excellency the governor be requested to forward copies of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, at the opening of the next session of our national Congress.

Approved September 7, 1882.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a petition of certain ex-soldiers of the Union Army resident in Kansas, praying for certain modifications of the pension laws; which I move lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Pensions when appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

FLORIDA CLAIMS UNDER SPANISH TREATY.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, submitted the following; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas President Hayes, by special message, dated March 1, 1880, called the attention of Congress to "the unsettled claims of Spanish inhabitants of East Florida during the years 1812 and 1813," arising out of the treaty of 1819 between the United States and Spain; and again, in his annual message to Congress, December, 1880, referred to the subject in the following words, to wit:

"The claims against the United States under the Florida treaty with Spain were submitted to Congress for its action at the late session, and I again invite your attention to this long-standing question with a view to a final disposition of the matter."

And whereas from a transcript of the diplomatic correspondence between Spain and the United States on the subject, transmitted to the Senate subsequent to the messages referred to, it appears that the Government of Spain has for many years strenuously and persistently urged the settlement of said claims by the payment by the United States of the unpaid portions of the decrees made by the judges who, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1823, adjudicated said claims.

And whereas the honor and dignity of the United States require that said matter shall be speedily and finally disposed of: Therefore, to the end that Congress may be advised as to what further legislation, if any, is necessary or proper in the premises,

Be it resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public service—

First. Whether or not, in his opinion, the ninth article of the treaty of 1819 between the United States and Spain has been fully executed by the United States.

Second. If it has not been fully executed, then whether the impediment to its execution arises out of unsettled questions of fact or undetermined questions of law, and what, if any, are such unsettled questions of fact and undetermined questions of law.

THE COINAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions the morning hour is closed.

Mr. MORRILL. Pursuant to a notice that I gave yesterday I now desire to address the Senate on Senate bill No. 226, introduced by me yesterday. The bill has not yet been received from the Printing Office, but I understand that it will be on the desks of Senators presently.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent for leave to proceed with his remarks on the subject of the bill named by him. The bill not being now at the Secretary's desk, the title of the bill will be read from the journal.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. "A bill (S. 226) relating to coinage, silver certificates, and United States notes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Vermont proceeding with his remarks at this time? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORRILL. The topic I shall mainly discuss to-day, and which, perhaps, I have most at heart, is the improvement of our fractional silver and other minor coinage; not, however, without bestowing some attention to collateral subjects of perhaps equal importance embraced in the bill already presented by me to the Senate.

The problem of a universal legal-tender coinage has long perplexed the world, and the vast extension of modern commerce, with the fluctuating supplies of the precious metals, tends to perpetuate its difficulties; but American interests are too great to be surrendered to the blunders of others or of ourselves, whether of action or non-action. Having the primacy in the production of the precious metals, shall we not refuse to confess that we know not how to handle them, neither for our own nor for the general good?

PRESENT COINAGE.

The present unsatisfactory condition of our gold and silver coinage, as well as of the token coinage, appears to me so pronounced as to demand the serious and early attention of the Senate. Though nominally representing the double standard, their relative proportional value is a fiction too gross to endure; and when the fiction explodes, as sometime it must explode, the heaviest loss will fall upon those least able to bear it. The law from Mount Sinai is against "divers weights, great and small." Our silver coins, and all the minor coins, are practically nothing more than tokens, representing values received for them much above their actual value. If the Government were poor, or its credit strained, such indirect gains might be winked at and tolerated; but the United States, now in full vigor and united manhood, with an overflowing treasury, have no excuse for maintaining such conflicting standards, and such paltry sources of unnecessary revenue, and by expedients which have grown to be inexcusable.

We have a system of internal taxation, and a tariff upon imports; and also, as a supplement beyond all this, a forced contribution levied upon our people of nearly 15 cents upon every silver dollar that comes forth from the Mint, and much more, or to over one-fifth part of the nominal value, upon all other silver coinage. This may not improperly be styled tyranny tempered by alloy.

Congress, however, having the exclusive power to coin money, is under the highest promptings of duty to provide the soundest and safest known to the world; and its duty is equally grave to protect the people against raising revenue, much or little, directly or indirectly, by debased coinage, or by a policy not based upon intrinsic value, which has never failed to blot the good name of any government that has ventured to try the disastrous experiment.

But we do not seem to blush at these profits, whether arising from silver or even copper coinage. When the copper cent was originally authorized by the United States the first importation of copper—and then all had to be imported—cost over 43 cents per pound, or three times as much as it does to-day, when the cent contains less than one-fifth of the weight originally proposed. Copper is now hardly worth more than some of the baser metals—less than the best cast-steel—and perhaps not so much as the iron anciently used as money in Sparta, or even as the iron and tin once used in England. Hamilton, whom Jefferson styled a "Colossus," with his usual extraordinary foresight, doubted whether copper would long remain fit for money.

When our silver dollars were first authorized their intrinsic value was equal to their nominal value, and no more were coined than were wanted for circulation. This was the doctrine and practice of our fathers. Now the actual value of the silver dollar is 85½ cents, instead of 93 cents in 1878, at the start of compulsory coinage; and we are daily doing all we can to depress its value at home by laborious additions to the enormous pile in the Treasury, until it threatens to topple over, carrying with it its false and flimsy scaffolding of equivocating silver certificates, which, when redeemed, must be redeemed in a metal of quite another color. Silver will not be accepted for certificates while anything much better can be had. The accumulated tons of silver dollars now held by the Treasury are a conspicuous overproduction, recognized, distrusted, and avoided by everybody. A glut appears for the moment to make silver, as it does any other commodity, scarcely worth having. Thus we appear to have, so to say, an "elephant" on hand, which, although white, not even Barnum will take off our hands; and which is not only difficult to keep, but, wherever sent, there are neither cages nor pockets ready to receive or to hold.

We are compelled to seek and to use at least $24,000,000 of revenue annually, with an option which allows the use of forty-eight million, above all that would otherwise be required, in order to perpetuate the colossal folly of hoarding 3,455 tons of silver dollars, 742 tons of fractional silver, and 140 tons of silver bullion, as useless, either to the Government or to the people, as the buried treasure of Captain Kidd.

SILVER CERTIFICATES.

Let me say at once that it is not proposed to deprive outstanding silver certificates of any existing functions. Let the nearly one hundred millions now afloat circulate with all of their privileges, but their bulk, already excessive, cannot be increased without danger to our whole monetary system.

It may be falsely supposed that the large, constant, and unending accumulation of silver dollars in the Treasury is squarely there for the redemption of outstanding silver certificates, but not one of these certificates ever has been or ever will be presented by the holder for redemption in silver. They will all turn up and be tendered at the custom-house, instead of gold, the first moment our exchanges feel the shock of an adverse balance of trade, or whenever there is an excess of imports over exports; and then the real difference between the standard of our gold and silver coins will become painfully manifest. We are bound by law to accept and receive silver certificates, in violation of our pledged public faith, as the equivalent of gold, at the custom-house. When the contingency occurs, exposing the hollow truce existing between our gold and silver standards, gold will become a fugitive and sink below the horizon, and a flickering single standard of silver, whether up or down, will become dominant. The disastrous effects thus to arise can not fail to disjoint our whole commerce, and will invade the home of every wage-receiving laborer of the country. Failing to keep our proper share of the products of our own gold mines, as well as silver, all the evils of a suddenly depreciated currency will be sure to revisit us, and with a proclamation that they come to stay. The Pactolian stream of gold will then cease to flow into the Treasury, and instead will come the juiceless flood of silver certificates.

Does any one propose that we shall step down and out from among leading industrial and commercial nations, by having hereafter to base all of our financial and business interests exclusively on silver? Can any one propose at a blow to cut down the wages of labor and the terms of all contracts to the extent of 15 or 20 per cent.? Must all of our trade and business enterprises be kept forever on the lookout for a financial convulsion, suspended only by a hair's breadth, in the rate of exchange? If not, then may I not hope that all will unite upon some proper and conservative measure that will save to our people the use of both gold and silver? At this moment the amount of silver dollars and fractions in the Treasury, never used except in very small sums, and never hoarded, is preposterously large in proportion to the amount of gold coins, which always have been and must continue to be used for all of the hundred-fold larger transactions.

TEMPORARY SUSPENSION OF COINAGE.

A temporary suspension of the coinage of silver can not reduce the amount in circulation in the least, as it will manifestly be impossible for several years to wholly exhaust the extensive stock now in the overloaded vaults of the Treasury; and all those whose opinions are most entitled to our respect advise that such a suspension will be the only effective policy to checkmate the anti-silver fanaticism supposed to prevail among some foreign nations. It would be stupid to suppose that these nations will ever abandon their gold policy while we are exerting our utmost power to sustain it, not here but there, by rolling out of their path the chief obstacle which blocks their way, but which, like the rock of Sisyphus, always rolls back to crush ourselves.

A temporary suspension is also indispensable to enable us to reform and to vastly improve our annual display of coinage, which in 1882 was equal in amount to one-half of the combined annual coinage of all other leading commercial nations.

The purpose of the proposition to cease issuing one and two dollar United States notes is to bring into circulation a larger amount of silver dollars. The money-order system and postal notes of the Post-Office Department—likely, as I am informed, soon to be greatly improved—fully demonstrate that small bills are no longer indispensable for remittances, and may properly be pushed aside to make room for silver dollars.

COINAGE ACTS.

In discussing the bill I have introduced I trust I may be excused for briefly referring to past and existing legislation, although the facts may be in all the horn-books of Congressional students.

By our first coinage act of 1792, based on the plan presented by Jefferson in 1787, one ounce of gold was made the equivalent of fifteen in silver; and the gold eagle, eleven-twelfths fine, weighed 270 grains. This proved to be an undervaluation of silver until 1834, when the gold eagle was reduced in weight to 258 grains, and slightly further reduced by alloy to a fraction below nine-tenths fine, or to eight hundred and ninety-nine and two-tenths thousandths. This made the value of the new eagle 66.68 cents less than the old. The half-eagle of 129 grains and the quarter-eagle of 64½ grains were of the same fineness. In 1837 the gold coinage was raised to nine-tenths fine, and the ratio to silver has since been one to sixteen. The double-eagle first appeared in 1849, and the gold dollar in 1853.

In 1792 it was provided by Congress that a silver dollar "of the value of a Spanish milled dollar, as the same is now current," should be coined, and it first appeared in 1794, weighing 416 grains, and it contained 371¼ grains of pure silver. By the act of 1837 the rate was reduced to 412½ grains, but the amount of pure silver was unchanged.

In 1851 the three-cent silver coin was authorized .750 fine, weighing 12⅜ grains.

By the act of 1853 all the fractions of the silver dollar were reduced to the ratio of 384 grains to the dollar, nine-tenths fine, and regulated by the metric system of weights, or for halves 12½ grams, quarters 6¼ grams, and dimes 2½ grams; but the weight of the three-cent piece was changed to three-fiftieths of the half-dollar, or to 11.52 grains. This was an unfortunate degradation of these coins, compensated by nothing gained abroad, and doomed them to much loss of prestige at home. Jefferson denied the right of Congress to lessen the value of coins. In consequence of this 7 per cent. shortage of silver in the half-dollars we no longer largely export them, as we did formerly, to South America and the West Indies, but peddle them out in dribblets at home, where they are reluctantly received as "Hobson's choice."

If gold had no foothold in our country from 1792 to 1834, silver had as little from 1837 to 1853, when it was suddenly cheapened and reinstated. It will be observed that when the merest fraction of difference occurs in the standard value of gold and silver coinage the undervalued coin becomes the sole coin in circulation, increasing its prerogatives as its merits diminish, and inexorably banishes that which is of superior value.

By the act of March 3, 1865, when we were, perhaps, more humble than we have been since, the legend of "In God we trust" was authorized upon all our coins. In 1873 we appear to have lapsed into incredulity, and this inscription was omitted; but at the same time the coinage acts were all revised and the trade-dollar had its ill-omened birth. No other important change was made, except that the old silver dollar, then the Delilah of nobody, was left out, and for the reason that none had been coined for many years, none were called for, and none could then have been coined without a positive loss to the Government.

TRADE-DOLLAR.

The trade-dollar, of unusual weight, was authorized in consequence of an urgent commercial demand presented exclusively by those engaged in the trade with China, who paid the Mint the cost of its manufacture. It bore its exceptional character on its face, as a piece of silver weighing 420 grains, nine-tenths fine. It was very awkwardly included as a legal tender, to the amount of $5, among fractional silver coins, but was known to be worth as bullion 3 or 4 per cent. more than its legal-tender value, which wholly precluded it from any such use. When, however, silver began to droop in price, it was plain that many of the 30,834,360 trade-dollars which had been exported might, much to our disadvantage, be returned to our hands; and, therefore, by the joint resolution of the House of Representatives, July 22, 1876 (introduced by Mr. RANDALL), to which all parties promptly assented, the non-used legal-tender power of the trade-dollar was withdrawn, but it remained at 1½ per cent. above par for a year and a half afterward. Since then, silver bullion having diminished in value, this commercial rover thrusts itself in our faces and demands to be counted, with all the privileges of our eldest born, or as it might have been if it had always belonged to our domestic family of coins, and had not worn on its face the indelible brand of inferiority. The legend, "In God we trust," still lingering on this nondescript dollar, is an apt reminder of a coin of Pope Innocent the Eleventh, when under great apprehensions from the King of France, which bore the inscription of "Help, Lord, or else I perish," with the figure of Saint Peter vainly trying, like our dollar, to walk on the waters, and piously calling for help. One other eccentricity may also be noticed, not unlike that on the coins of Cromwell, upon one side of which appeared "God with us," and upon the other side, "The Commonwealth of England." This caused a cavalier with some wit to say, "God and the Commonwealth are on different sides." The legend on the trade-dollar, "In God we trust," is on the obverse side, while it is true that the "United States of America" and the eagle are ominously arrayed on the reverse or opposite side.

Unfortunately all the trade-dollars have not left our country for our country's good; they were made here by our machinery, and all that are in the hands of innocent holders should be offered a little chance to get out of the way, if they will only depart quickly.

EXCESS OF SILVER.

There are in circulation at the present time $93,953,780 of our silver coinage. There are also $141,337,533 more in the Treasury, which the Government would be only too glad to unload. Half as much of fractional silver and about three times as many silver dollars are now in the Treasury as are held by the people. Where is it to go? Cui bono? The Treasury is thoroughly gorged, and the stomachs of the people are suffering from hopeless indigestion.

It can hardly be doubted that the two or more millions of silver bullion which has been bought every month, and by the overtasked mints converted into more millions of dollars, amounting in five years and seven months to the prodigious sum of $154,370,899, would have been more largely accepted and held as ready money by the people if the Government had left silver to stand on its own merits, and had not enlisted in what seemed almost a crusade to force an excessive and unnatural amount into circulation. Sober legislators appeared to rely upon coercion to popularize the diffusion of silver, and also upon the ponderous creation of an absolute supply to create an equally absolute demand; but the public, wandering in unbelief, declined to be coerced, and subsequent experience, to a considerable extent, may have confirmed the general and more pronounced lack of faith. It is true that the Government has been and is regularly in the market for its moon-struck supply of bullion, yet any advantage of an increased or fictitious creation of value upon the general product of silver mines has been and is impossible, because all the rest of mankind, or the major part of consumers, are entirely free to buy or not to buy, and especially free to take notice of the fact that our Government is a purchaser on sheer compulsion, bound by positive law, to buy and to hoard a swelling surplus, that must ere long break through all barriers and inundate all markets. Beclouded by such surroundings, it is not wonderful that the price of silver has been rather adversely affected. The London quotation for silver, February 28, 1878, was 55 pence per ounce, and has rarely if ever been so much since, being to-day 50⅛ pence per ounce, British standard.* Binding itself as a perpetual purchaser has placed the Government too nearly in the attitude of the reckless speculators of the stock exchange, or of buying silver to make a "corner" in order to squeeze some outsider. But the action of the Government is as bootless as was the stamp of the tyrant's foot to raise armies. We have nothing to show for it except our own perspiration. The patronage of Government, bestowed upon silver mines, or nickel mines, or copper mines, to secure their permanent prosperity, is unreliable, and no more should be sought after by them than can be justified by the actual requirements of the Government. It should also be forever borne in mind that the annual production of our gold mines, heretofore much the largest, is now a little less than our silver mines, and no more favoritism should be shown to one than to the other.

When our standard money is of universal value, circulating without loss elsewhere as well as at home, the increase or decrease of its volume does not materially affect the price of commodities. The intercommunication of the markets of the world preserves values at nearly a universal level, and redresses fluctuations at the bare cost of the transportation of coin.

It would obviously be to our great hurt if our specie should lack harmony with the standard of other commercial nations with whom our chief intercourse must be maintained. Different standards of money are worse and more inconvenient than different languages. Whatever disadvantages may now or hereafter arise from adverse exchanges must be borne exclusively by those who adhere to the inferior standard. If we make one dollar in gold, or one dollar in silver, of the same intrinsic value each bears in London, Frankfort, and Paris, we may coin few or many without appreciable effect upon prices or values. Great Britain is supposed to have large control of the gold standard of Europe; but, if so, it is not derived from her abundant coinage, no gold having been coined there in 1882, and only £209,880 of silver. Others may soon find that their interests can only be permanently promoted, not by a scramble with all the world for gold, but by uniting with us in giving to both silver and gold at least a fair trial to hold universal and harmonious relations. Meantime, whatever others may do, the vital interests of our own people can not be effectually guarded by a left-handed imposition of the silver standard.

CANADIAN SILVER.

When our fractional silver strays into Canada it is hailed as an intruder, and cannot pass at less than 20 per cent. discount, or our half-dollar shrinks to 40 cents and the quarter to 20 cents; but Canadian silver coins are plentiful on our northern borders, and, though really of less value than our fractional silver coins, they are generally accepted at their full nominal value. Canadian silver should be sternly refused in all American markets, or subjected to a discount of 23.2 per cent., its bullion value. This would be reciprocity, and exclude a nuisance.

CHARACTER OF OUR COINAGE.

Although the abrasion of large coins, when in connection with the free use of paper currency, is not supposed to exceed 1 per cent. in fifty years, it is considerably more upon small coins. It is therefore of some importance that the surface of coins should not be too greatly exposed. Upon the larger coins, having possibly the central portions slightly concave, the figures in bas-relief, further protected by a gradually raised outer border, may be well rounded with little danger. This would give depth for greater boldness in the figures, so much admired on ancient Greek coins, and would also make it impracticable to split coins and substitute baser metals for the inner part extracted, as has too often been practiced.

COPPER CENTS.

Our copper coins as well as those of other countries, in numbers exceeding all other coins, have been subjected to many fantastic changes. Rude everywhere, as they originally appeared, the most extensive fabrication has added little grace to relieve them from being everywhere "common and unclean." The copper coins issued in England by Charles II possessed intrinsic value equal to their nominal value. Charles XII of Sweden, however, made copper coins of less weight than that of our earliest copper cent, and then paid them to his army as the value of a silver dollar. It is some gratification to find our treatment of copper a little less heroic than that of the Swede.

* According to United States standard, this shows a declension in value from 108.509 cents per ounce to 99.631 cents, or about 8½ per cent.

The earliest American copper coins made by any State were made at Rupert, in Vermont, and before Vermont had been admitted into the Union. A mint was there established for eight or ten years, having a capacity to stamp 60 coppers per minute, upon which the so-called "baby-head" Goddess of Liberty appeared; but truth compels me to say that this goddess was no more comely than that on the coins of the present day, although she was a hundred years younger. The owner of the mint, Reuben Harmon, was bound to pay the State 2½ per cent. for his privilege. At first these coins passed two for a penny, then four, and then eight, when they no longer paid for the cost, mainly on account of the sudden competition of other States, and of the large importations of Birmingham hardware, commonly called "Bungtown coppers." We had no protective tariff then, and we have none now, against "Bungtowns," whether of copper or silver.

In 1787, by authority of Congress, a contract was made with James Jarvis for three hundred tons of copper coin of the Federal standard, and cents were coined at the New Haven mint of the following description: On one side thirteen circles linked together, a small circle in the middle, with the words "We are one;" on the other side a sun-dial, and below the dial the words "Mind your business."

In 1792 Congress authorized the coinage of a copper cent weighing 264 grains, which was reduced in 1793 to 208 grains, again reduced in 1796 to 168 grains, later to 140 grains, on which the so-called "booby-head" appears—and in 1857 to 72 grains, of which 88 per cent. was to be copper and 12 per cent. nickel. In 1864 it was once more reduced to 48 grains, 95 per cent. of copper and 5 per cent. of tin or zinc. Finally, in 1872 the last change was made to three-fourths of copper and one-fourth nickel, but the weight remains at 48 grains.

The frequent and wide alterations which have been made in our copper coins show that intrinsic value has almost vanished, and they bear no proportional value to other coins; but, at the start, when copper bore a much higher price, the weight of the cent was fixed at five and a half times what it is now. In the southern portion of our country, and especially on the Pacific coast, copper coins have been as uncurrent as the yellow-colored Chinaman, or for a long time they were practically tabooed, and even now they are unwelcome travelers, much in need of a passport. Wherever not altogether snubbed the copper cent must pass, as Wood's notable copper coins must have passed in America or Ireland, far above any real value, and with little other merit beyond that of the dusky color now supplied on its face to our recent Indian image of "Liberty." After common use these coins assume a deeper Ethiopic complexion and become petty nuisances, scents as well as cents, redolent of many coppery smells which are easily transmitted to other coins or to anything with which they hold pocket intercourse. Copper as a metal is wondrously useful, daily becoming more so, but neither Lycurgus nor Hamilton would at this day think of stamping it as money. Certainly we can do better. If the cent and two-cent coins were now made wholly of nickel the Government would obtain an ample seigniorage; and nickel, when compared with swarthy copper, is immaculate, or clean and bright. The importance of the cent coinage will be realized when we find that over forty million pieces were coined the past year.

The Chinese and Japanese bronze coins are of very light weight, of annular form, with a square hole in the center, and some of them are quite equal to other exhibitions of Oriental art which are now received with public favor. The specimen of an unauthorized cent made by our Mint in 1850 with a round hole in the center suggests what might be done, if not with a nickel cent, perhaps with a half-dime of silver. The present nickel half-dimes are so nearly of the same diameter and thickness of a quarter-dollar that they are often not readily distinguished; but with a perforation, square or round, in the center all confusion would be remedied, as well by touch as by sight. The three-cent nickel coin, no longer being the amount of letter postage-stamps, is no longer wanted, and might well give place to a two-cent nickel.

GOLD COINS.

The expediency of the original issue of the one-dollar and three-dollar gold coins has not been confirmed by experience. It will be observed, however, that our gold coins are all of equal fineness, and, in proportion to nominal value, of equal weight. At home or abroad, as to actual and relative value, they are not exposed to much criticism; but their beauty as works of art is not excessive, the figures being thin and barren of relief, especially the eagle on the twenty-dollar gold coin, which best represents an unstuffed and unmounted flattened skin of some wild bird of prey long packed away by Professor Baird in the vaults of the National Museum.

SILVER COINS.

But our silver coins and all the minor coinage, including tokens, are bewilderingly destitute of symmetry or any other visible merit, bearing no proportion of intrinsic value to each other, in harmony partly with the troy and partly with the metric system of weights, some of them defying the laws of their birth, others easily colored with a gilded lie by the cheapest counterfeiter, none of them having a "coigne of vantage" as to proportion, design, or beauty of workmanship; and the wider they circulate the wider discredit do they stamp upon the Government. Coins equal in purity and weight to those of the Government now yield a tempting profit to enterprising counterfeiters. Surely Congress is not blameless when authorizing such an incoherent and fluttering output of coins; and the invisible genius presiding over the Mint from year to year would seem to have been just equal to the law and its profits, or just equal to the inflexible and awkward jobs he had in hand. If our coins were asked who made them, each one might answer in the dialect of Topsy, "I 'spect I growed." I would not unjustly nor ill-naturedly criticise our coinage, but, while itself representing the standard of truth, it should be tried by that standard, however severe the ordeal may be. Able to command the best and highest resources of art, the United States should not be content with the poorest. We have been furnishing silver coinage, durable as it ought to be for half a century, as though it were a garment annually to be worn out and to be replaced on every first day of April; but we have given little attention to the material, less to the fit or its fashion, and Brother Jonathan's style never fails to be recognized and laughed at. The annual reproduction here of these prolific examples of the general state of the arts seems unworthy of our country. The Mint does its mechanical work with wonderful accuracy, but neither power nor means to do anything more has ever been granted or supplied. Some of the engravers on wood for our magazines command better pay than the engravers, the "men of all work," employed at the Mint in Philadelphia, and yet some of the medals executed there are fairly creditable.

ANCIENT COINAGE.

Without making any pretentious display of erudition on the subject of coinage, as my study of the subject has not been so extended as to encourage any vanity of that sort, I will yet venture to call the attention of Senators very briefly to the character of the coinage of earlier times, more especially to some examples of our English ancestors, with the history of which, whether good or bad, all will be more or less familiar; and finally to the absence of artistic perfection exhibited in the unattractive character of our own coinage, of which any one can summon from his pocket a cloud of witnesses.

What are now often called Roman or Greek medals were really coins put into circulation by the Greek and Roman governments in past ages, and appear, as the invention of a polished people—to have been not merely for service as coins, but were often works of art, or miniature copies of such works, illustrating not only ancient manners and much of ancient poetry, but they have also served to fix the date of many otherwise debatable facts of history. Many of them were designed to mark victories, like the medals of Napoleon, or notable events, and to perpetuate the fame of rulers, whose faces and actions were thus portrayed in a manner that insured circulation throughout empires and throughout future ages. The consent of the Roman Senate was first obtained by Cæsar to place his portrait on Roman coins, and his example appears to have been diligently followed by his successors. Previously, only the heads of their deities, or of those who had received divine honors, were placed on their coins; but subsequently the laureated heads with great prodigality celebrated their own virtues.

These ancient coins are highly prized, not for the metal they contain—as one of brass or copper* frequently commands a much higher price than its weight in gold—but they are eagerly sought after by collectors to be placed in cabinets, being valuable for the illustration of the epoch, or sometimes as specimens of rare beauty of workmanship; and what was worth the merest pittance when issued by Augustus or by Antony and Cleopatra now often commands a fabulous sum. So highly esteemed are some of these specimens, that bogus imitations have been cunningly made, and, after being buried in the earth long enough to apparently acquire the rust and smell of antiquity, they come forth to deceive the very elect, or at least to deceive the collectors of those very rare coins once restored to the sacks of Joseph's brethren, or of those ducats of old Duke Dandolo said to have been loaned by Shylock to Antonio.

ENGLISH COINS.

Coming down to later times, we find that in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when silver money had been much debased and had also been shamefully clipped, she caused it all to be called in and stamped according to its purity and actual weight. This greatly improved commercial exchanges, promoted trade with other nations, and made, in the latter half of the sixteenth century, the long-headed and red-haired queen very popular. Strange to say, however, while rescuing England from base coin, she still issued it without stint for Ireland. Under the iron rule of Cromwell distinguished French artists were employed upon the coinage of the Commonwealth, and it was ordered with much spirit that "in beauty of mechanical execution the coins of this nation should not be behind any nation." This order was strictly enforced, and England to this day has been unable to show any coins more beautifully designed and engraved than those of the Lord Protector in 1658. Notwithstanding his head was removed from Westminster Abbey, then stuck upon a pole and carried through the streets of London, yet his splendid head by Simon on silver crowns has perhaps among British coins had a yet more unrivaled elevation. The guinea issued under Charles II was so named because made of gold from Guinea, and bore the effigy of an elephant, from the vain idea that its circulation in England might encourage the importation of more gold from Africa.

So eminent a man as Sir Isaac Newton was made Master of the Mint in the reign of George I, as he had been in that of William III, when clipped coins were once more called in and exchanged for new coins of full value. In the reign of George I, with Walpole as minister, the famous royal patent was granted to William Wood for "coining small money for Ireland and the English Plantations;" and he coined a multitude of spurious shillings from copper or brass, as well as baser "small money for Ireland." "Wood's money" was, however, fiercely assailed by the irrepressible Dean Swift, and the fiat of the government was scornfully trampled upon by the Irish people.

The coinage under George III, fitly represented by his stolid face, was hardly less wretched than many other monumental facts of his long and wretched reign. The St. George and the dragon that appeared in 1817 on the coins of England, and notably on the gold sovereign, which superseded the guinea, was the spirited and very creditable work of Pistrucci, a foreign artist employed by the Prince Regent. The head of George IV, on the coins of his reign, was designed by Chantrey, the sculptor, and is very fine as a portrait, though said to be amazingly flattered.

Fifty-five million dollars of gold coins so late as 1842 were withdrawn by England and new coins of full weight given at the expense of the government.

FRENCH COINAGE.

The Parisian school of coinage, founded by David, the celebrated painter, aimed at first at something better than what may be called the grandiose style, and copied nature, or more of the simplicity and elegance of the Greek medals.

Among the large number of French medals given July 4, 1822, to our Congressional Library by George W. Erving, and accepted by Congress (but unfortunately destroyed subsequently by the fire in the Library), there were many executed with remarkable skill, and nearly all commemorated some event in the history of Napoleon. Fresh copies of these, at small expense, it is supposed, might easily be obtained. In the beauty of workmanship and aptness of device French coins, for many years, were held to be superior to those of any other country, especially in the rounded and bolder relief of the figures. But some decadence began under Louis XVIII, and less credit would be due to the flood of coins bearing the dull image of Napoleon III, who had his portrait pompously decorated with the ancient laurel crown, that he might pass, if not as a Roman Cæsar, at least as a legitimate Napoleon.

UNITED STATES COINAGE.

From time to time many governments have made earnest efforts to improve the style and mechanical execution of their coinage, not always with marked success, but generally with some advance upon the past. The difficulty of hammering flat circular coins having been overcome by the machinery of the mill and screw in 1561, the square, oblong, octagon, and other ruder, irregular pieces were at once superseded. Men of science, or of eminence, were employed to advise or direct the work of mints, such as Locke, and Newton, and Herschel in England, and in our own country Rittenhouse, Boudinot, the Pattersons, and Snowden. The service was held to be both honorable and nationally important, and here early attracted the attention of such men as Jefferson, Hamilton, Franklin, and John Quincy Adams. In one of Franklin's letters he laments that the eagle should have been selected as the emblem of the United States, and writes: "For my part, I wish the bald eagle had not been chosen as the representative of our country. He is a bird of bad moral character; he does not get his living honestly." Franklin might have added that the eagle was already more appropriately claimed on the imperial standards of Russia, Austria, Prussia, and France.

For the reverse sides of our coins there were differences of opinion in Congress and long and grave debate, as the Senate wanted the portrait of Washington, and the House insisted, with success, upon a "figure emblematic of Liberty," although Representative Livermore, of New Hampshire, is reported to have said that "the President was a very good emblem of Liberty; but what an emblematic figure might be he could not tell. A ghost had been said to be in the shape of the sound of a drum, and so might Liberty for aught he knew."

Congress has by law prescribed within narrow bounds the devices and legends to be stamped upon our coins. Upon the obverse side there is to be an impression of Liberty, bearing the inscription of the word "Liberty" and the year of the coinage, and upon the reverse side there is to be the figure or representation of an eagle, with the inscription, "United States of America" and "E pluribus unum" and a designation of the value of the coin; but on the one and three dollar gold pieces, and on the dime, five, three, and one cent pieces the figure of the eagle is to be omitted. Upon the reverse of the trade-dollar the weight and fineness were to be inscribed.

EMBLEM OF LIBERTY.

The emblem of Liberty, like that of many other virtues, has been said to be always represented in petticoats. The Britannia of Great Britain appears in form like a near relation to the Liberty, or the Minerva often found on old Greek and Roman coins, and in the days of Charles II the Duchess of Richmond served as a model to the engraver; but, more recently, Victoria, by the distinguished medalist Wyon, has been stamped with great excellence upon British coins, and she, like Queen Anne, seems to have occasionally insisted upon decent drapery about the bust.

Our sitting emblem of Liberty on fractional silver looks very like a descendant of our grandmother Britannia by Clark Mills. Whether she wears long hair or a jaunty widow's cap may not be quite clear, and there is no end of crinoline, while the obtruding whalebones, in bas-relief, compressing the waist, painfully disclose overworn corsets. But, as our highest effort and best, on the copper cent and on the one-dollar and three-dollar gold coins the head of our emblem appears in the baubles of an Indian princess, doubtless an ideal Pocahontas—"that female bully of the town"—with the head accordingly stuck around with feathers, and labeled on the tiara "Liberty." Its circulation in the Indian Territory, I regret to say, has not been commensurate to the witchery of the bait. England strangely omits to stamp on her figure of the lion "this is a lion;" but our emblem, safe from all misconception, is always plainly and veraciously branded across the forehead, "Liberty."

I am a stalwart supporter of the consecrated emblem, but would invoke the genius even of flattery to present the American "Liberty" without the feathers of a drum-major, and certainly something better than a Grecian face in the regalia of a squaw, or than a feeble copy of our ancient grandmother.

AMERICAN EAGLES.

We have on our various coins a grim crowd of so-called eagles, chiefly representing a belated evolution from the buzzard family. The different artists—technically perhaps of the same family origin—would seem to have spent their whole wit upon their several masterpieces. It is to be hoped, however, that their models, like the griffin and the dodo, are all extinct. Whether their outstretched wings point upward or downward, it is a great comfort to see that the birds are all truly American, as each one loyally shows himself, always and everywhere, a spread eagle. Whoever looks at them may well croak, and utter Poe's doleful raven slang of "N-e-v-e-r m-o-r-e," though they are not ravens, as none ever fed little children; but each one, in full-blown dignity, is, as John Neal has said, "a fierce gray bird with bending beak," and not without terrors in a claw. The artists, it must be allowed, are great in profile views of "bending beaks," with feathery appendages; but it can not be a serious error to suppose their inspiration to have been largely derived from an obedient study of that familiar and rather pungent text which reads, "For wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together." It will be observed, too, that all of their beaks are wide open, equally ready to dine or to scream.

If the truth must be confessed, our figures of the eagle are not much above caricatures, and exhibit so little of truth and grace of form that our bakers would refuse to reproduce them in their cakes sold at a dime for a dozen. What should be feathers are hardly to be distinguished from the imbricated backs of that rare bird known as the turtle. The imputed vanity of our bird surely never got its start from any flattery on our coins, though he seems to be stiff there, with the purpose of inviting all the double-headed spread eagles of Europe either to a fight or a carousal, not caring a "continental" which.

Strangely enough the trade-dollar has a left-handed figure of Liberty sitting on a bale of cotton, but the eagle is certainly not the worst we have, though a monstrosity wonderfully and fearfully made. That on the twenty-dollar gold piece, nearly destitute of relief, and in all senses flat, is very uncouthly drawn, with the wings turned wrong side up, like an inverted umbrella in a gust of wind, and tricked out with the trumpery of endless and meaningless scroll decorations. But unhappily on our latest dollar will be found the blandest and possibly, where all are ugly, our most abominable eagle, unless we except the one on the wing which once appeared as a scarecrow on the silver dollar, afterward belittled as the eagle volant on the copper cent, and was then esteemed the nearest of kin to the vulture, as some plain matter-of-fact people will call the stray figure which seems determined to roost upon the head of Liberty at the top of the Capitol. I would not take a feather from our—but would have him appear, if I could, more in the truthful dignity and beauty of nature, and then dismiss the whole brood of invented eagles.

Majestic monarch of the clouds,

THE MINT FETTERED BY LAW.

The Director of the Mint, the coiner and engraver, do not appear to have any discretion in regard to existing coins, which must be made from "the original dies already authorized," and "conformable in all respects to the law," and mainly the law of eighty years' standing. It is, even under the law of 1873, only when new coins or devices are authorized that the Director of the Mint has power to seek any improvements through the services of competent artists. This law was in the right direction, but wholly inoperative, as it has no application except "when new coins or devices are authorized." No new coins being authorized, no changes can be made in the old matrices and dies; and the engraver, however expert and skillful, has no possible opportunity to show any rare skill or advancement in the perfection of his work. Nor can his ambition be greatly stimulated by his rather limited compensation. Quantity, not quality, would seem to have been best appreciated; and while we have eclipsed the world in quantity, we have suffered an eclipse in quality.

REFORM DESIRABLE.

Is it not time that we should put forth some effort to improve the general character and appearance of our coinage? What may have been acceptable and even creditable to our people in 1792 or in 1837, is no more applicable to our condition now than would be the garments of a boy to the man after a lapse of half a century. We do not now depend upon foreign skill or upon foreign metals for our coinage; and a great nation can not afford to have any work which is exclusively under its control pass as second rate. We are prone to suggest doubts as to whether the people of this or that nation are competent to sustain a republican form of government. With the several examples of state-craft shown in attempts to regulate our coinage which have too often decorated United States statutes can we blame those we have criticised if they occasionally remind us that our Government has not yet passed beyond the region of experiment? But can we not have United States coins with more of positive value, allied and related to each other, and stamped with such simplicity of design and beauty of finish as to give them rank as models worthy to endure for many generations?

First, our coins should, from their size and character, be easily distinguishable, whether by sight or touch, one from another; and there should be no silver or nickel coins which, by being gilded, would simulate and pass for gold. At present our silver dime is apparently of the same size of the three-cent piece and of the gold quarter-eagle, and the first and last have the same ancient Britannia doing her best as the latest edition of American Liberty. The latest copper cent is very like the three-dollar gold piece, with a similar picture of the head of an Indian Venus de Modoc as the emblem of Liberty. Some of the nickel five-cent pieces, costing less than half a cent, are so nearly of the same size and weight of the gold half-eagle that they have already been gilded and circulated for one thousand times their real value. We have now in circulation five-cent pieces, as well as three-cent pieces, diverse in metal, form, inscription, and in value; and those made of the dearest metal are executed in the cheapest and most commonplace manner. On one of the five-cent pieces the design has been said to suggest its origin in old pictures of a tombstone overhung by weeping willows. The clumsy execution and ill-assorted relations of these coins will be recognized at sight by everybody except their godfathers.

TOO MUCH ALLOY.

There is so much alloy in our silver coins that they do not remain bright and attractive. When handled as change they become, after the briefest contact with their fellow-associates, as dingy as the dullest lead and tempt no one to break any commandment, for they are never coveted. Solid silverware when no finer than United States coin retains so little of permanent brilliancy that it has been almost dethroned by plated ware (not altogether because burglars refuse the cheaper substitute, but) because the substitute displays the beauty of silver more nearly in its absolute purity; and its luster, though only skin deep, does not vanish like that of the night-blooming cereus in a single night. Our silver coins should not be inferior in purity to the sterling standard of Great Britain. But it must be admitted that our current small coins are suggestive of no nobler use than that found in paying a reckoning at a corner grocery. They ought to contain enough of the precious metals to preserve them from the owner's contempt and to insure some hospitality wherever they lodge. They ought, also, to be so good as to banish the circulation here of Canadian silver, which, though uninvited, comes in large force, demanding American privileges.

The actual weight of pure silver in our fractional coins is as much too small as that of the alloy is too great; and as works of art they have little merit, or far less than the works daily exhibited by our artificers in metals less precious. Believing that some reform would be a great and lasting public benefit, I am induced to urge a higher real value in fractional silver coins, or a restoration to the proportions of the silver dollar, which they always held until degraded, in order to find a French market which they failed to reach, by the act of 1853; and also to urge that the purity of the metal, now nine-tenths fine, shall be not less than that of the sterling silver of Great Britain, or nine hundred and twenty-five one-thousandths fine. The copper cent, it is to be hoped, may be abandoned, and gradually superseded by another, less poisonous, composed chiefly of nickel, and far above two mills in value. Our token coinage not being redeemable, we cannot afford to send it forth glaringly deficient in intrinsic value.

CONCLUSION.

Beyond all these points, let me urge that our coins, in aptness of design and perfection of artistic execution, shall not be inferior, as they confessedly are, to any foreign examples, and certainly not inferior to the ordinary work of the best silversmiths or goldsmiths. As St. Paul said to the Philippians: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

The questions, as I have intended to present them, are practical and political but not partisan, except among twinkling demagogues who may shine for the moment like Jack-a-lanterns in a dark swamp and are snuffed out by the first rays of morning light. Let us have American coins so good that the people will be willing to work for them, and gladly carry them at their own expense, without asking free transportation from the Government.

The Greeks and Romans left no monuments illustrating their career more permanent than their coins. We have ceremoniously deposited in the corner-stones of many large edifices specimens of the United States coins. Should these ever become visible to a distant posterity, will they be likely to reflect much honor upon those who have thus challenged future consideration? The rapid extinction going on of our public debt and the wonderful growth of the country in population and wealth indicate that our great seaport on the Atlantic, and possibly another on the Pacific, may ere long prove to be an aggressive competitor for the controlling monetary power of the world. Producing all the silver and gold that we require for domestic use, with a large surplus to supply the demands of others less fortunate, may we not declare in Cromwellian phraseology, "that in the beauty of mechanical execution the coins of this nation should not be behind any nation?" And, therefore, let me urge that here and now is a proper time and opportunity for some action creditable to the Government, worthy of Congress, and such as will have the lasting approval of the people.

Mr. President, I ask that the bill lie on the table until the Committee on Finance shall have been appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid on the table, if there be no objection, to be referred to the Committee on Finance when appointed.

INDIAN MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the policy and expediency of creating a military academy west of the Mississippi River for the training and education of Indian youths and men up to a proper age as soldiers, and of admitting them, when qualified, into the regular Army as enlisted men; and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Several messages in writing, of an executive character, were received during the day from the President of the United States by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand there is some executive business, and I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 5, 1883.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourn to-morrow it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING THE DIGEST OF RULES.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That 2,500 copies of the rules and practice of the House of Representatives for the present session be printed and bound for the use of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. With the consent of the House, the Chair will now present certain executive and other communications.

There was no objection.

PRINTING RECORDS OF THE SUPREME COURT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, asking for an immediate appropriation for the printing of records in said court.

The SPEAKER. As the Committee on Appropriations has not yet been appointed, the Chair would suggest that it would perhaps be better to refer this communication to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as there seems to be some necessity for prompt action.

Mr. CALKINS. Is there a resolution also submitted?

The SPEAKER. There is a draught of a resolution accompanying the communication.

Mr. CALKINS. Would it be in order to ask that the resolution be read?

The SPEAKER. It would go to the Committee of the Whole along with the communication.

Mr. CALKINS. Then——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the resolution proposes to appropriate the sum of $20,000.

Mr. CALKINS. May I be permitted to ask another question? I desire to know whether the Chair is informed that in the opinion of the court an appropriation will be necessary for this purpose before the Committee on Appropriations will probably be organized.

The SPEAKER. According to a memorandum submitted with the letter of the Chief-Justice it appears that this appropriation is necessary at once, or the court will be compelled to suspend business about the 1st of January.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the communication of the Chief-Justice be read.

The SPEAKER. The communication is very brief, and will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, December 4, 1883.

SIR: The appropriation of last year for printing the records of the Supreme Court has been exhausted, and the business of the court is likely to be impeded unless an additional sum is immediately made available for that purpose. The clerk informs me that at least $20,000 will be required to put the printing sufficiently in advance of the current business to prevent embarrassment before the regular appropriation bills can be passed. May I ask you to call the attention of the House to the subject, so that prompt action may be had?

Very respectfully,

M. R. WAITE, Chief-Justice.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to inquire whether there is a joint resolution upon which the Committee of the Whole can act?

Mr. RANDALL. It is understood that there is objection to the consideration of this matter at this time.

The SPEAKER. Certainly. The Chair suggested that the communication itself should be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, inasmuch as no committee on appropriations has yet been appointed. Does the gentleman object to that?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not. I object to any hasty action until we know why the appropriation has been exhausted.

Mr. CALKINS. I think I can make the matter plain if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will yield a moment. It is within the recollection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to any discussion at this time.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask my colleague to withdraw his objection to my making a statement to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object to the statement of my colleague, but I object to any consideration of this matter at this time.

Mr. CALKINS. I was about to remark that the last Congress passed a provision in an appropriation bill by which the clerk of the Supreme Court was compelled to cover into the Treasury all the fees received in his office in excess of a specified salary.

Heretofore the fund derived from this source has been subject to the order of the court, and a portion of it could be used for this purpose. But, inadvertently no doubt, the bill of the last Congress contained no provision whereby the records could be printed if the specific appropriation for that purpose should become exhausted. Gentlemen will remember the provision of that bill as I do.

Mr. RANDALL. I only want to say that I have a horror of deficiencies. I think that all deficiencies should have a thorough investigation not only by the House but by an appointed committee of the House.

Mr. CALKINS. I entirely agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but here is an emergency requiring prompt action.

Mr. TALBOTT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, no debate is in order. If there be no objection the communication just read will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before this is referred I desire to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order. The regular order is called for.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

Mr. KEIFER. Before the reference I desire to have my question answered.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order; the regular order has been called for.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not propose to debate. I wish to inquire whether there is accompanying this communication a resolution or bill which can be considered.

The SPEAKER. No resolution or bill can be introduced in the House except by a member. The communication is accompanied with the form of a resolution; but, of course, that is not before the House for action as a resolution. If there be no objection this communication will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is the joint resolution referred with it?

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution is not referred; it is not before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that it be introduced and referred to the committee.

The SPEAKER. If introduced, it must be by a member.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I ask unanimous consent to introduce it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution making an appropriation of $20,000 to supply this deficiency; and he desires this resolution to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with the communication of the Chief-Justice. Is there objection?

Mr. COBB. I object.

The communication was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES BY CLERK OF LAST HOUSE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from Edward McPherson, Clerk of the last House of Representatives, transmitting a report of expenditures from July 1, 1883, to December 3, 1883; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Accounts when appointed.

REPORTS OF DOORKEEPER OF LAST HOUSE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a list of the property of the House of Representatives under the control of W. P. Brownlow, Doorkeeper of the last House, December 3, 1883; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Accounts when appointed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from W. P. Brownlow, Doorkeeper of the last House of Representatives, transmitting an inventory of books and public documents in the folding-room of the House, December 4, 1883; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Accounts when appointed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from W. P. Brownlow, Doorkeeper of the last House, transmitting a statement of sales of waste paper accumulated in his office since March 4, 1882; which was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Accounts when appointed.

ACCOUNTS OF ARMY DISBURSING OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of inspection of money accounts of disbursing officers of the Army; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department when appointed.

VIRGINIA ELECTION CONTEST.

The House resumed, as unfinished business, the consideration of the following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. TUCKER:

Resolved, That the certificates and all other papers relating to the election of a Representative of the first Congressional district of Virginia in the Forty-eighth Congress be referred to the Committee on Elections when appointed, with instructions to report at as early a day as practicable which of the rival claimants to the seat from that district has the prima facie right thereto, reserving to the other party the privilege of contesting the case upon the merits.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] is entitled to the floor, and has ten minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. TUCKER. The objections which have been made to this resolution by the gentlemen on the other side I desire to answer this morning, without any reference to anything that was said by my colleagues from Virginia. The whole difficulty, as stated on the other side, is that the House has acted upon this question by allowing the sitting member to be sworn in. I desire to show to the House the confusion involved in this statement and the distinction to be made in reference to this point.

All the preliminary procedure of swearing in of members is under a law of Congress passed for the purpose of preventing the disorganization of a public body, or, as more accurately stated, passed that its organization may not be prevented; and the swearing in of members under the law depends upon the regularity of the certificates presented. This is a procedure preliminary to organization; but as soon as the members are sworn in upon the presentation of certificates which on their face are regular, then the House is organized, and organized for the first time. When organized it is no longer under the law as a disorganized body of members-elect, but it is under the Constitution of the United States. Under the Constitution the House thus organized has a right to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members.

Now, I put to gentlemen this question: If it appears that a member who has been sworn in is an alien, has he the right, because there is no contestant of his seat, to sit here during a whole Congress when the Constitution disqualifies him? Though his return may be in regular form, and though he may have been sworn in, the House has the right to judge whether such a return can constitute him a member of this corporate body—one of the branches of the Legislature of the country.

The other question is, What is a return? Here is a return made by the secretary of the Commonwealth, based upon the action of the canvassing board; and the question is whether that return is tainted with fraud, irregularity, illegality, or based upon a mistake of facts. It is not a question of the election, because that goes back to the voting at the polls. The question is as to the counting of the votes; and the counting of the votes by this canvassing board was a miscount, because it left out a part of the constituency that was to be represented.

Mr. MAYO. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MAYO. The gentleman is undertaking to state before the House facts which he has no right to present here.

The SPEAKER. That is not a question of order. The gentleman occupying the floor has the right to make his statement in his own way.

Mr. TUCKER. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. Speaker, I say the papers which I have presented show that this canvassing board excluded the vote of a whole county that would have elected Judge Garrison; and by the exclusion of the vote of that county the gentleman on the other side [Mr. MAYO] holds his seat in this House.

And I say the exclusion of that county was made on a technicality so trivial, that this House, when its Committee on Elections has made a report on the subject, will not hesitate to say it was without foundation, and was null and void and of no effect.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the whole question is whether that county ought properly to have been counted or not. If on the face of the certificate it appeared that county was not counted, then the gentleman should not have been sworn in; but the gentleman now occupying the seat having been sworn in because that fact did not appear on the face of the certificate, the question now is whether we have not the right to present the facts to show that the gentleman who now occupies the seat for the intermediate period between the swearing in of members and the report of the committee is not entitled to it, and that the gentleman who is entitled upon a fair and true count should be allowed to come in and take his seat.

And that is the whole purpose of the resolution which I have offered. It is not a question of the final determination of the contested-election case, which will come up hereafter, but whether Mr. Garrison is not entitled to take his seat, from which he has been obstructed by the action of this returning board. If this be so, this House has the right to judge of the validity of that return, and upon the facts to say that it was invalid, null and void, and of no effect. And that is the whole question I call upon this House to decide.

Gentlemen say there is no precedent for it. I hope, Mr. Speaker, there never will be a precedent for any such case as this.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope my friend will allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. TUCKER. I will if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. CALKINS. Of course it will.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman yields the floor it will come out of his time.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me, as we have no time for reply.

Mr. TUCKER. Very well, then.

Mr. CALKINS. I wish the gentleman to draw a distinction between a prima facie right of a member claiming a seat and the right of a member already sworn in and occupying the seat.

Mr. TUCKER. I do. The prima facie right the gentleman speaks of is the right to be sworn in under the certificate of the returning board; but I say that the prima facie right of which I speak is the right under that returning-board certificate to hold the seat during the intermediate time from the swearing in until the House decides on the final right to the seat on the merits. That certificate, proper on its face, I hold is invalidated by the fact that the canvassing board on the votes returned ought to have given the certificate to Judge Garrison. It is not a question of who is entitled to the seat finally upon a determination of the votes cast at the election, but it is as to who is entitled to the seat upon the returns now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to say about what was said by the gentleman on the other side yesterday [Mr. MAYO], that he sought nothing but justice. I tell you that the Democratic party in this House will do justice to him and to all others in these election cases. I am not prompted by any motive to do him injustice, and he knows it. He knows I have no personal animosity to him. My only feeling is that it is the right of the House to vindicate itself by saying a man shall not hold a seat here who holds it under a return which is invalid.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Three minutes.

Mr. KASSON. Are there two prima facie rights here?

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir; there are not two prima facie rights. If my friend will permit me to say again, as he does not seem to have taken in the idea, the prima facie right he speaks of is the prima facie right in a preliminary procedure which goes to the organization of the House, while the prima facie right I am speaking of is the prima facie right of a member to his seat after the House has been organized.

Mr. REED. Then there are two, after all?

Mr. CALKINS. The time to have submitted that question of prima facie right was when the roll was called, and the member should have been asked to stand aside and the resolution then submitted.

Mr. TUCKER. McCrary, in his book on elections, sections 204–222, says that before and in the course of the procedure for the organization of the House no member has the right to question any other member's title, except on the face of the certificate; because the law has provided that the only test on the swearing in of members shall be whether the member holds a certificate clean on its face. This is in order to prevent anarchy, in order to secure an organization, and therefore no objection of this kind shall be made at that time. But when we get into the House, when the House is organized by swearing in the members, and it becomes incorporated as one of the branches of the legislative department of the Government, then the House has the right which the members in their unorganized condition did not have before it was organized, to determine as to the returns of a member. It is not a question depending on how many votes have been received, but it is whether on the vote returned the canvassing board ought to have given the certificate to Mr. Garrison rather than to the gentleman on the other side. And that is all I have to say.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for the discussion of this subject is exhausted.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit in this connection the resolution I send to the desk.

Mr. BUDD. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

The SPEAKER. The resolution submitted by the gentleman from Missouri will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution be committed to the Committee on Elections, when formed, with instructions to report on the legal question involved therein.

Mr. CALKINS. I would like to ask a parliamentary question. Would that involve the consideration by the committee of the prima facie right to the seat before the committee reports to the House the legal question involved?

The SPEAKER. That is not a question for the Chair to determine.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri if it is his desire to have a report upon the legal question before determining the prima facie right to the seat?

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the resolution be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Missouri which has just been read.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire, with the consent of the House, to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think if we begin introducing bills we had better have a morning hour proper.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn; and before the motion is submitted I want to say to the members present that in all probability no business will be done to-morrow from what I hear around me. It is, I believe, the general understanding that there will be no business transacted to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JONES] desires to make an announcement.

DEATH OF HON. THOMAS H. HERNDON.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty to announce the death of my predecessor, Hon. THOMAS H. HERNDON, which occurred on the 29th day of March last, at his home in Mobile, Ala. At some future time I shall ask that a day be set aside for the consideration of appropriate obituary resolutions. I now offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has heard with profound regret of the death of Hon. THOMAS H. HERNDON, late a representative-elect from the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, this House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State, requesting certain charges in the estimates of that Department relating to foreign intercourse contained in the annual Book of Estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885; which was ordered to be printed, and lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations when appointed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Comptroller of the Currency, pursuant to section 333 of the Revised Statutes, transmitting his annual report; which was ordered to be printed, and lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Finance when appointed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from Capt. R. P. Hughes, Third Infantry, in regard to an investigation made to determine the true boundary lines of the military reservation of Fort Missoula, Montana Territory; which was ordered to lie on the table, with the accompanying papers, and to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed.

HEATING AND VENTILATING SENATE CHAMBER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Sergeant-at-Arms on the heating and ventilation of the Senate Chamber; which was ordered to be printed, and lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate when appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of Second Lieutenant W. P. Hogarty, United States Army (retired), praying that he be given the full rank of captain upon the retired list; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed.

He also presented a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a petition of enlisted men of the United States Army, praying for the passage of a law making provision for the retirement under certain conditions of enlisted men of the Army with fixed rates of pay, allowances, &c.; which was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs when appointed.

Mr. GARLAND. Yesterday the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] presented a petition of J. W. Niles, a citizen of Arkansas, in which, according to the statement made by the Senator, "he complains that by an unlawful combination he and his associates have been prevented from exercising their rights under the land laws to make a pre-emption of land." That petition was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands when appointed. My attention was withdrawn at the time from the business of the Senate, and I failed to notice the presentation of the petition when it was presented by the Senator from Ohio. Some three or four weeks since Mr. Niles called upon me in reference to the grounds of his complaint, which, I see, were substantially stated by the Senator from Ohio in presenting the petition. I had never heard before of the complaints that were made by Mr. Niles, and I took it upon myself to address letters to the two courts, the national court and the State court, of which he complained. I have received information direct from those courts, from the judge and the district attorney of one and from the judge of the other, but I have not had the pleasure of seeing Mr. Niles since to lay them before him and to make known to him their responses. Inasmuch as the petition has been filed here, of which I make no complaint at all, I ask that the responses from those two courts be filed also and referred to the Committee on Public Lands when appointed. I present the responses of the two courts of which complaint is made, with certified copies of transcripts, &c., from the records of those courts and other documents, which will be interesting and instructive to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks leave to submit, to be referred in connection with the petition presented yesterday by the Senator from Ohio, certain papers, that they may be referred with the petition to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SHERMAN. The request of the Senator from Arkansas is a very proper one. As a matter of course the whole subject ought to be examined. I desire to say that I presented the petition at the request of a citizen of the United States who claimed that officers of the United States had violated his rights as a citizen. I therefore deemed it proper to have the matter examined into. I have no objection at all to having any paper presented that will throw light on the subject.

Mr. GARLAND. I make no complaint whatever of the Senator presenting the petition. I should have presented it myself for Mr. Niles if he had asked me. I have never declined to do that for any person. At the same time, as the complaint goes forward, I simply ask that these two responses, which substantially deny the charge that he has made, and in which they have answered him, may go with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the papers submitted by the Senator from Arkansas will be received, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands when appointed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a memorial and joint resolution of the Legislature of Nebraska, having reference to the taxing of railroad lands. I ask that it be read, and lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Railroads when appointed.

The joint resolution was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Railroads when appointed, and was read, as follows:

Memorial and joint resolution to Congress relative to lands in the State of Nebraska granted to railroad companies and not taxed.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Whereas the General Government has made large and generous grants of the public domain to aid in the construction of railroads in the State of Nebraska, as well as other States; and

Whereas certain railroad companies in the State of Nebraska having neglected to obtain patents upon large portions of such lands and have refused to pay taxes on the same; and

Whereas it is manifest injustice to all citizens of this State, and particularly to settlers in the immediate vicinity of said lands who are by their industry and improvements adding value to said lands and at the same time being unjustly taxed for the support of local and State government: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Nebraska, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to secure such action by the heads of Departments at Washington or such legislation by Congress as will compel said railroad companies to take out patents for said lands, so that they may be taxed, or that they may revert to the General Government and be subject to the homestead and pre-emption laws.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be requested to forward to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a copy of this memorial and joint resolution.

ALFRED W. AGEE,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

GEORGE L. BROWN,
Secretary of the Senate.

GEORGE M. HUMPHREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Attest:

BRAD. D. SLAUGHTER,
Chief Clerk of House of Representatives.

Approved February 24, A. D. 1883.

JAMES W. DAWES, Governor.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present also a memorial and joint resolution of the Legislature of Nebraska, having reference to the improvement of the Missouri River, which I ask to have read.

The joint resolution was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries when appointed, and was read, as follows:

Memorial and joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska concerning the improvement of the Missouri River.

Whereas the importance to the whole country of continuing the work of the improvement of the great water way of the West, the Missouri, the Mississippi, and the Ohio, a system of rivers unequaled on the face of the globe as a God-blessed competition with the railways in the interest of cheap transportation, is a matter of even more than national interest:

Resolved, That the house of representatives of the State of Nebraska requests its Senators and Representatives in Congress to sustain the plans for the improvement of said rivers, and to use their best endeavors to secure the appropriations necessary to carry out the much-needed work as speedily as practicable.

Resolved, That we believe that an independent Missouri River commission, in purposes similar to the Mississippi River Commission, is demanded by the best interests of the great valley of the Missouri—the most fertile agricultural region in the world.

Resolved, That the clerk of this house is instructed to forward forthwith attested copies of this resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

I hereby certify that the foregoing preamble and resolution was adopted by the house on February 15, 1883.

BRAD. D. SLAUGHTER, Chief Clerk.

Attest:

JAMES F. ZEDIKER,
First Assistant and Journal Clerk.

A true and correct copy.

JAMES F. ZEDIKER,
First Assistant and Journal Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. MANDERSON. I also present a memorial and joint resolution of the Legislature of Nebraska, requesting that the duty on barbed wire and the material of which it is made be removed. I ask that it be read, and lie upon the table, to be referred at the proper time to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution was ordered to lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Finance when appointed, and was read, as follows:

Memorial and joint resolution requesting that the duty be removed off of barbed wire and the material it is manufactured from.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Whereas the article of barbed wire and the material from which it is made has become so necessary for use that it is indispensable to the people of the State of Nebraska, and especially to the agricultural interest, we do most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States to repeal the duty on the same: Therefore,

Be it resolved, &c., That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby requested to use all honorable means to secure the removal of such duty so it may be placed on the free list.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, instructed to transmit a certified copy of this memorial and joint resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

GEORGE M. HUMPHREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Attest:

BRAD. D. SLAUGHTER,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

ALFRED W. AGEE.
President of the Senate.

Attest:

GEORGE L. BROWN,
Secretary of the Senate.

Approved, February 21, A. D. 1883.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 1) extending the time fixed for the joint commission appointed to consider the number and salaries of officers and employés of the two Houses to submit their report; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions of the committee of the National Association of the Veterans of the Mexican War, in favor of pensions being allowed to the surviving soldiers and the widows of deceased soldiers of the war with Mexico.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the resolutions be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The resolutions were read, and ordered to be referred to the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

At a meeting of the National Association of the Veterans of the Mexican War, held in the city of Washington, D. C., on the 6th day of December, 1883, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

First. Resolved, That we congratulate the American people that peace prevails and plenty abounds throughout the borders of this great nation, and that amity and good fellowship exist between the various sections thereof.

Second. That we regard as especially gratifying the friendly relations existing between the United States and our neighbor, the Republic of Mexico, and we earnestly hope that nothing will ever occur to make the relations less peaceful, but that the means and habits of intercommunication between us may be still further extended and increased until we shall have such a community of interests and feeling that war between the two countries may never again be possible.

Third. That our security at home and our standing abroad as a nation depend upon the patriotism and valor of our citizen soldiery rather than the strength of our standing armies, and that it is one of the first and most important duties of our Government to foster this essential element of our national greatness; and in order to do which effectively important services should, in every instance, meet with certain recognition and just reward.

Fourth. That the reward meted out to the survivors of our Army and Navy in Mexico has not been at all commensurate with the great value of the services rendered, neither has it been such as to meet the reasonable expectations and oft-repeated demands of the great majority of the people of this country, as expressed in the public prints, through the resolutions of mass-meetings and conventions, and by the solemn enactments of the Legislatures of twenty-eight of the States of this Union; all of which are unrescinded, and stand to-day as the will of the people of these States.

Fifth. That the conquest achieved by the valor and prowess of that Army and Navy added more than a million square miles to our public domain, extending it to the western ocean, an area almost equal to that of twenty of the States, and which has already produced enough of the precious metals to pay off the national debt; higher and better than which, it added fresh laurels to our national fame and vindicated the honor of our flag.

Sixth. That those who achieved these momentous results, a large majority of the survivors of whom are now living in extreme poverty, deserve better of their countrymen than to be allowed to stand as alms-men for a national bounty, and we respectfully ask of the Congress of the United States that their names be placed upon the pension-rolls of your country on equal terms with those of the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 as a just recognition of their meritorious services.

Seventh. That we are profoundly grateful to those members of Congress who have labored zealously at former sessions of Congress to secure the passage of a bill giving pensions to the veterans of the Mexican war.

Eighth. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of this association, and that a copy each be presented to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives in Congress now assembled, with the request that they be laid before the bodies over which they respectively preside for their favorable consideration.

Respectfully submitted.

Memorial and joint resolution concerning the people of Nebraska and the lands known as the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company lands.

Resolved, That whereas there are many settlers and purchasers of the public domain in the State of Nebraska who have patents from the United States for said land, and which are now disputed by a claim from other parties derived originally from grants of land by Congress to a certain railroad company known as the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, i. e., the Kneevals land claim;

Whereas such dispute of title is not only a great injury and wrong to many persons who have spent years of toil, labor, and expense upon said land—many of these persons filed on or homesteaded these lands between the 14th day of April and the 28th day of March, A. D. 1869, after which in due process of time the United States issued patents to the party or parties so filing on or homesteading the said land—and these party or parties, with the United States patent in their possession, have sold, transferred these said lands to a third party, and the third party to the fourth party, all transfers being based upon the original United States patent, the abstract of title from the county clerk's office so showing;

Whereas, such being substantially the facts of the case, a large portion of our citizens are dissatisfied, uneasy, in trouble, and anxious about the titles to their hard-earned homes: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska (in this the eighteenth session), That Congress be respectfully asked to make such speedy settlement as will settle the title and titles now in dispute, doing ample justice to all parties concerned, reinstating those who have been rejected and paying the claims of those who have defended their homes in courts of law, giving us all such satisfaction and proof that the United States patent will be made good to her citizens and defended at all hazards.

Resolved, That copies of the foregoing resolutions be forwarded by the secretary of state to the Senators and Representatives of Nebraska elected or now in Congress.

GEORGE M. HUMPHREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Attest:

BRAD. D. SLAUGHTER,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

GEORGE L. BROWN,
Secretary of the Senate.

DETACHED ARMY SERVICE.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War inform the Senate of the names and rank of officers of the Army on detached service (including officers on sick leave), where serving, and what service performing, and the length of time detached; also whether officers thus absent are needed with their commands, and, if so, what superior military reason called for their being detached.

CLERKS FOR SENATORS.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed:

Resolved, That each Senator, except the chairmen of standing or select committees of the Senate, shall be entitled to a clerk or secretary at a salary of $1,000 annually, the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

"JOHNSON'S ORIGINAL PORTRAITS OF WASHINGTON."

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of purchasing 5,000 copies of the work entitled "Original Portraits of Washington, by Elizabeth Bryant Johnson," for distribution to the public libraries throughout the United States.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the resolution provide for the purchase, or does it merely instruct the committee to inquire into the expediency of purchasing?

Mr. VOORHEES. It simply directs the Library Committee to inquire into the propriety of doing so; that is all.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it pass.

The resolution was agreed to.

VALLEY FORGE ENCAMPMENT GROUNDS.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency and feasibility of purchasing the encampment grounds, embracing the lines of fortifications, forts, redoubts, and earthworks, occupied by the army of the American Revolution at Valley Forge from December 17, 1777, to June 18, 1778, together with the headquarters of the army occupied by Washington during that period; said grounds, situated in Montgomery County, in the State of Pennsylvania, and supposed to contain about 1,600 acres, to be purchased for the purpose of being inclosed and maintained as a national park, in just recognition by the Government of the United States of the sufferings, the patriotism, and the unfailing courage there displayed in the cause of constitutional liberty.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed:

Resolved, That, in the judgment of the Senate, a public debt is not a public blessing, and that any measure of financial policy looking to the perpetuation of the present interest-bearing national debt of this Government for the purposes of national banking, or on any other account, meets with the disapprobation of this body, and should be viewed with alarm by the tax-payers of the United States.

TRANSFER OF A LAND GRANT.

Mr. HILL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution which I offered on Thursday last.

The resolution submitted by Mr. HILL December 6 was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to furnish to the Senate copies of all papers now on file in the Interior Department relating to the transfer of the land grant of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know that I have any objection to the adoption of the resolution, and should never oppose any request for information which any Senator might allege that he believed to be important to the public interests; but there are some assumptions of fact in the resolution that I do not wish to be committed to nor have the Senate pass upon without some further advice from the Senator from Colorado. I would be glad if he would state, in the first place, if there ever has been a grant of land to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, and, if so, whether any transfer ever has been made and the amount of it, so that we may act advisedly in the premises.

Mr. HILL. I would say in reply to the Senator from Kansas that there was a grant of land made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company in 1871. That grant lapsed in five years. It expired in 1876.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator states that it lapsed in 1876.

Mr. HILL. In 1876. Since that time there has been an attempt made to transfer the land to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company. The information the resolution calls for, I think, is very important to enable the Senate to act intelligently upon measures which may come before it. The subject to which it relates involves the disposition of some 2,000,000 acres of valuable land in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. INGALLS. How many acres does the Senator state?

Mr. HILL. About 2,000,000 acres.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator to say that the land grant had lapsed. Does he mean to have it understood by the Senate that there has been any declaration by any competent authority that the land grant has lapsed?

Mr. HILL. The land grant lapsed by the terms of the act.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the Senator confident on that subject?

Mr. HILL. I am confident on that subject. The grant was made with the condition that the road should be built in five years, and it was made in 1871.

Mr. INGALLS. And the Senator is equally confident that the amount involved is 2,000,000 acres?

Mr. HILL. Very nearly 2,000,000 acres.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the Senator aware that this subject has been before the Attorney-General of the United States, and that he has declared that the land grant had not lapsed?

Mr. HILL. I am not aware that the Attorney-General declared that the grant had not lapsed. As I remember the decision of the Attorney-General, it was to the effect that the New Orleans and Pacific Railway Company was the legal successor of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company.

Mr. INGALLS. I will ask the Secretary to read the syllabus of the opinion of the Attorney-General on this subject, which consists of four or five paragraphs, in order that the Senate may be advised fully as to the actual condition of the land grant and the alleged lapse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Kansas.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The grant of lands made by act of Congress of March 3, 1871, to aid in the construction of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad, was a grant in presenti, and invested the company with a present interest in the lands, but the grant did not acquire precision and attach to any specific tracts until the route of the road was definitely located.

The proviso in the grant requiring the whole road to be completed within five years from the date of the act was a condition subsequent, which did not ipso facto work a forfeiture of the grant for breach of the condition, but simply authorized the United States to declare a forfeiture by proper legislative or judicial proceedings. Until there was such a forfeiture and re-entry the grant remained unimpaired in the grantee, who could lawfully proceed with the construction of the road notwithstanding the default.

The New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Company, being lawfully seized of a present interest in the lands, had a right to sell and assign them to the New Orleans Pacific Company without the assent of Congress, as the grant was made to the former company, its successors and assigns, and the right to assign thereby expressly anticipated and provided for in the granting act.

Where a portion of the road was built before the grant was made, neither the original company nor its assignee is entitled to lands opposite such constructed road.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senate will observe from this syllabus that the Attorney-General of the United States, the proper law officer of the Executive Departments, has declared, in opposition to the statement of the Senator from Colorado, that this land grant did not lapse; and it would have been obviously unjust if the statement should have gone to the country on the assertion of the Senator from Colorado, undenied, that the Secretary of the Interior had attempted to revivify a lapsed land grant and authorize its assignment and transfer to a railroad company not entitled to it.

In order also that the Senate may understand the minuteness and value of the information presented by the Senator from Colorado on this subject when he states that the amount involved in the land grant is about 2,000,000 acres, I will say further that the amount within the granted limits in the Natchitoches district is 348,183.03 acres; in the New Orleans district, 231,786.17 acres; making a total of 579,969.20 acres; of which not a single acre has been either transferred or patented. The land now remains precisely as it has hitherto, and the assignment from the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company to the other company has in no sense whatever been made operative or effective.

I assume that the Senator from Colorado desires, if possible, to prevent the accomplishment of what might be an illegal or an unadvisable transfer of public lands in violation either of the rights of the Government or of settlers thereon, in which event his resolution, if agreed to, will accomplish nothing; but if he wishes to secure the public domain or the settlers on this land against a wrongful acquisition of any portion of the territory by the railroad company, his resolution should be accompanied by a request to the proper officers to see that no more of the land is transferred.

Mr. President, it has been rumored in various localities during the summer that this session was to be characterized by a memorable onslaught on the administration of the Interior Department of this Government. I have no idea that the Senator from Colorado, whose relations I know to be entirely cordial with his former colleague in this body, the present Secretary of the Interior, shares at all in that design or purpose, but I merely wished at the outset to emphasize the fact that this is, in my opinion, the first in the series of assaults that are intended to be made upon the administration of that Department. I have been informed, and I believe, that it is to be followed by an assault upon the administration of the Pension Bureau; that that will be succeeded by an assault upon the Land Office in connection with the public domain so far as railroads and other claimants are concerned; and that the Indian service is then to be assailed in all its administration from Manitoba to the Gulf of Mexico; that no portion of that great branch of the public service, with powers that are inherently more than those exercised by many heads of European principalities, is to escape an assault affecting the purity of its administration.

Without any observation as to the somewhat vulgar and homely but not entirely unpicturesque adage about the obscenity of the bird that defiles its own nest, I wish upon the threshold and in the vestibule of these proceedings to declare and to announce that in my judgment, which I believe to be shared by the country, the Department of the Interior has never been administered with more fidelity, with more integrity, with more honesty in all its branches than under its present efficient and honorable head. I wish also to say further that I believe the head of that Department stands before the country inviting the strictest scrutiny and the minutest investigation into all the affairs of that great office.

So far as the matter before the Senate now is concerned there is nothing that can be accomplished by the adoption of this resolution in the way of saving the public domain from depredation if this alleged transfer from one railroad company to the other was illegal. I assume that the Senator from Colorado desires to protect the public domain, if possible, and I have no objection myself to the adoption of the resolution, but would suggest that if anything is desired to be accomplished, inasmuch as the allegations of the Senator that this land grant had lapsed and that the Secretary had attempted to authorize the transfer of a lapsed land grant are shown by the opinion of the Attorney-General to be incorrect, and inasmuch as the amount that the Senator states is shown also to be incorrect by about three-quarters of the entire amount, the resolution should be amended in order to be effective and operative.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, there is nothing which the Senator from Kansas can say about obscenity, or fouling nests, or anything else which will deter me from doing what I believe to be my duty; and that is to ask the Senate to obtain the information which it ought to have in order to act intelligently on subjects which will come before it.

As to my statement that the grant had lapsed, I intended to say that one of the conditions of the grant was that the railroad should be built within five years, and during those five years not one foot of road was built. In that sense I stated that the grant had lapsed. As to the two millions of acres, I believe my information is correct. It may be slightly in error, but not largely. I believe my source of information is as correct as that which is furnished by the Senator from Kansas.

As to the onslaught which the Senator says is to be made upon the Interior Department, I know nothing about it. I have heard from a good many different sources that an onslaught was to be made by the railroad companies upon Congress this winter, and that there was to be a gathering of railroad men here such as has never been seen in Washington before to prevent legislation detrimental to their interests and also to procure legislation in their favor and against the interests of the people of the United States.

I understand that an attempt has been made (and that it will very soon be accomplished) to place the title to the lands granted the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company in the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company. If my information is correct the whole proceeding is illegal. Even if the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company is the legal successor to the other company, I am informed that there is no evidence whatever that there has ever been any legal transfer made.

I desire to prevent the consummation of this act, and the best means of preventing it is to place before the Senate the information called for. Let us know on what ground this action of the Interior Department is proposed to be based. That is all my resolution asks for. There is nothing whatever personal in it. It is merely a proposition that the Secretary of the Interior shall furnish the Senate copies of papers on file in the Interior Department. I hope, Mr. President, the Senate will grant that request.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the land has been transferred so far as it can possibly be done from the original grantee to the assignee, and the land has been withdrawn from market and is now being posted up for the purpose of being delivered to the second corporation. The amount is precisely what I have stated. If the Senator desires to accomplish the prevention of the transfer of this land from the public domain into the hands of the railroad corporation his resolution is inoperative, because while the information is being transmitted to the Senate the patents may issue, and that will be the end of the matter.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again reported.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution.

Mr. HILL. I understand that the title to this land has not yet passed to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, and my object is to prevent the transfer of the land to that company unless it is right and just that it should be done.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator seems not to be familiar with the Congressional literature on these subjects and with the reports already made. I will ask the Secretary to read the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, dated March 13, 1883, to the President of the United States, and the indorsements of the President, which I send to the desk.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 13, 1883.

SIR: The New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company applied to this Department more than a year ago for a transfer to itself of the lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company by the twenty-second section of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, presenting at the same time satisfactory proof of said transfer as between the said companies. I have delayed action thereon for many months, against the persistent pressure of persons in interest, in the expectation that Congress might legislate upon the subject-matter thereof; but that body having adjourned, without action thereon, and knowing of no reason for further delay, I have now the honor to submit the same for your consideration.

In reply to my predecessor's request of January 5, 1882, the Attorney-General, under date of June 12, ultimo, submitted to him an opinion (copy herewith) that the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company was a grant in præsenti; that that company had an assignable interest in the lands granted to it; that the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company is such a successor to or assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Company as is contemplated by the act of March 3, 1871; that even if the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas road was constructed subsequently to the date of said act, so much of its road as is now owned by the New Orleans and Pacific Company is such a road as is contemplated for acceptance by the President within the meaning of said act, and that patents may issue to the latter company for lands opposite to and conterminous with such constructed portion of road.

I also submit herewith a copy of the report of the Senate Committee on Railroads (under date of June 7, 1882) declaring that, in its judgment, no considerations of public policy require a forfeiture of the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company; and also two letters (herewith) under date of December 15, last, from Hon. L. E. PAYSON, of the House Judiciary Committee, in one of which he notifies this Department that upon that day, at a meeting of the committee, he had formally withdrawn the pending resolution offered by him at the previous session of Congress for a forfeiture of said grant. In the other, after stating his request in October last for a suspension of Department action until he could be heard before the House Judiciary Committee upon the matter, he elaborately discussed the questions involved, and announcing that after conference with them the Senators and House delegation from Louisiana interpose no opposition to immediate action by this Department, and that his own objections are disposed of and withdrawn, states his conclusions that the New Orleans Pacific Company is entitled to the grant, both under the law and the equities of the case, and that the rights of settlers are fully protected.

I have also the honor to submit herewith two reports on the New Orleans Pacific Railway by Mr. Thomas Hassard, whom you appointed commissioner to examine completed portions of said railway.

The first report bears date October 26, 1881, and has not been submitted to you at an earlier date on account of the controversies in question. The portions of said railway examined, and at that time reported on, extend from the west bank of the Mississippi River opposite Thalia street, New Orleans, La., in a northwesterly direction, near said river, sixty miles, to near the town of Donaldson, in Tp. 11 S., R. 15 E.; also from Bayou Lamourie, in Tp. 2 N., R. 1 E., to a point in Tp. 4 N., R. 2 W., a distance of 20 miles; also from the junction of said railway with the Texas and Pacific Railway in Shreveport, La., southwesterly to Tp. 10 N., R. 12 W., a distance of 50 miles.

The second report bears date 15th of November, 1882, and relates to such portions of said railroad as were not examined and reported on in October, 1881, amounting to 198 miles, lying between New Orleans and Shreveport.

The Commissioner reports said portions of road, 328 miles in all, as constructed in substantial compliance with law and the instructions of this Department.

In view of the facts and the law of the case, I regard the New Orleans and Pacific Railway Company as the lawful assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, and entitled to the lands granted by the twenty-second section of the act of March 3, 1871, to said latter-named company and to patents therefor in so far as it has earned or hereafter may earn the same under that act, with the exception below named, and recommend that you accept said 328 miles of said road, less and exclusive of 68 miles of the line of said New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg road extending from New Orleans to White Castle, between New Orleans and Shreveport (to which 68 miles the New Orleans Pacific road has withdrawn its claim and right to receive lands under the twenty-second section of said act), and that patents for such lands as may have been earned by the construction be issued to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company (exclusive nevertheless of lands along said 68 miles) on their compliance with the law and regulations in such case made and provided. These patents will, of course, be subject to rights acquired by any person or corporation prior to the act of March 3, 1871.

Requesting that the inclosures herewith be returned to this Department when no longer needed for the purposes hereof, I am, very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 16, 1883.

The within recommendations are approved.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

Mr. INGALLS. It would appear from this communication that this whole question had been passed upon by the law officer of the Government; that in pursuance of the opinion of the Attorney-General the Secretary of the Interior took the action that is set forth in his letter of March 13. This communication was transmitted to the President of the United States, and by him the recommendations therein contained were approved. If the Senator from Colorado had advised himself more definitely than he has done, before presenting his resolution, as to the exact condition of this business, he would have found the subsequent action that has been taken by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to which I will now call the attention of the Senate.

On the 19th day of March, 1883, after the letter of the Secretary of the Interior had been approved by the President of the United States, the Secretary referred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for appropriate action a copy of that communication, with the President's acceptance indorsed thereon, together with all the papers and maps relating to the case. Upon the 19th day of April, 1883, the Commissioner of the General Land Office submitted to the Department of the Interior certain questions regarding the definite location of and withdrawal of lands for the New Orleans Pacific Railroad. To this, on the 23d of April, the Secretary responded, declining to pass upon the questions presented because the office had expressed no opinion thereon. On the 22d of May, 1883, the Commissioner of the General Land Office advised Mr. Wheelock, the president of the company, that the dates of the filing of the maps of constructed road in the Department would be treated as the dates of definite location. Upon the following day Mr. Wheelock, the president, advised the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the company would accept the dates of definite location fixed by the letter of the 22d of the same month, which was the 22d of last May.

By letters dated October 15, 1883, some six months after this action had been taken, the matter still remaining in abeyance, the local officers at New Orleans and Natchitoches, La., were directed to adjust the withdrawal made in 1871 and 1873 upon the line of general route of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Vicksburg road to the line of definite location of the New Orleans Pacific road; whereupon, on the 8th day of November, 1883, within the granted limits, the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company in the Natchitoches district selected 348,183.03 acres, and on the 13th day of November, 1883, within the granted limits in the New Orleans district, the New Orleans Pacific Company selected land to the amount of 231,786.17 acres, making in all—that is up to this time—subject to the claims of that assignee of the original grant the amount of 579,969.20 acres. No lands have yet been definitely patented or withdrawn, and the whole matter remains before the Commissioner of the General Land Office, ready to be acted upon whenever the clerical force of the office will permit these lands to be patented.

There has been nothing obscure, there has been nothing occult or mysterious or hidden, about this transaction. It has been a matter of public record from the beginning until the present time, and step after step has been taken in accordance with law, as might have been seen by any person who saw fit to inquire into the records of the office, until this amount of land now has been definitely selected and will be transferred unless Congress takes some action. But now the Senator from Colorado, professing to desire to protect the Government and to prevent what he declares to be an illegal assignment of a lapsed grant, simply introduces a resolution calling for information about a matter which is already of public record and accessible to everybody, leaving the main fact in the controversy, that is, the transfer of these lands by patent to the railroad company, a matter to be adjusted without further interference by Congress.

Now, so far as I am concerned, I have not examined this matter sufficiently to say definitely whether the assignment was valid or not. I know nothing about that and care nothing about it. But until some authority overturns the decision of the Attorney-General and shows that the action of the Secretary and the recommendations of the President shall be set aside, there is a prima facie showing in favor of the legality of the assignment and of the withdrawal. But if the Senator desires to test that question and protect the public domain against the presumed loss of half a million acres of ground he will not reach it by this resolution, because when it is answered the papers that I have read and referred to will be transmitted to the Senate, and meanwhile the mischief, if mischief it is, may have been accomplished.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, there are a great many other papers in this case besides those the Senator from Kansas has read, and I have a desire that all the papers in the case should be presented to the Senate, that we may act intelligently on the subject. If, as the Senator from Kansas says, this is all matter of public record, there can be no objection to the Senate adopting the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection.

Mr. HILL. Why then this discussion over the resolution? I had not supposed it was necessary to discuss the merits of the questions involved when nothing was before the Senate but a resolution calling for certain papers. I do not feel disposed at this time to enter upon a discussion as to the quantity of land or as to the decision of the Attorney-General. I merely ask that we may have the information before us by obtaining copies of all the papers on record.

Mr. INGALLS. Does not the Senator meanwhile desire that the patenting of this land should be prevented?

Mr. HILL. Certainly I desire that no further action shall be taken toward perfecting the title to these lands until we have the papers, and if the Senator has an amendment of that kind to offer I shall be very glad to have it presented.

Mr. INGALLS. I shall offer no amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOINT COMMISSION ON CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I rise to ask that a joint resolution of which the Senate was notified this morning during the morning hour, passed by the House of Representatives, may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask consent at this time to lay before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 1) extending the time fixed for the joint commission appointed to consider the number and salaries of officers and employés of the two Houses to submit their report was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT. If there is any rule which prevents the consideration of the resolution at the present time I ask that it may be suspended and that the resolution be now considered.

At the last session a joint committee or commission, consisting of three members of the Senate and three members of the House of Representatives, was appointed to adjust and equalize the salaries of the officials of the two Houses and to report on the second Monday of this session; which would be to-day. The committee has not been able to finish its duties so as to be ready to report, and the House of Representatives has passed a resolution extending the time for the committee to report until the 10th day of January. I hope the resolution may be passed in concurrence with the House of Representatives.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read in full.

The joint resolution was read at length. It provides that the joint commission appointed under the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1883, to consider the question of the salaries and compensation of the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, and also the number of such employés necessary for the official transaction of the business of the two Houses, shall have until Thursday, January 10, in which to prepare and submit their report to the two Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that this joint resolution be now considered with a view to final action. Is there objection?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no Calendar. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 10, 1883.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of Thursday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONGRESSIONAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer the resolution which I send to the desk. I ask that it may be read, and then, if there be no objection, that it may be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which objection, if any, will be in order.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

A joint resolution extending the time fixed for the joint commission appointed to consider the number and salaries of officers and employés of the two Houses to submit their report.

Resolved, &c., That the joint commission appointed under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, to consider the question of the salaries and compensation of the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, and also the number of such employés necessary for the efficient transaction of the business of the two Houses, have until January 10 in which to prepare and submit their report to the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 1) was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEMBERS SWORN IN.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a question of the highest privilege. The Delegate-elect from Dakota is present, and I ask that he be sworn in.

Mr. STRAIT. I have the same request to make on behalf of my colleague, Mr. Milo White, Representative-elect from the first Congressional district of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will present themselves to be sworn in.

Mr. JOHN B. RAYMOND, Delegate-elect from Dakota, and Mr. MILO WHITE, Representative-elect from the first Congressional district of Minnesota, appeared and took the oath prescribed by section 1756 of the Revised Statutes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to offer a resolution which pertains to the regular order. It is in regard to the printing of bills to be introduced.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has demanded the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. He withdraws the demand until the resolution is read.

The SPEAKER. The resolution may be read, after which it will be open to objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That private bills which have been heretofore printed shall not be again printed at the expense of the Government until favorably reported by a committee of the House.

Mr. MILLS. I want the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman from Texas object to this resolution?

Mr. MILLS. I object to taking this time to consider the question. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the Clerk will read the first clause of Rule XXIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEAVE TO PRINT SPEECHES.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I wish to submit a resolution to amend the rules, and ask that it be reported by the Clerk. I would inquire of the Chair whether it is not in order to submit a resolution to amend the rules for reference to the Committee on Rules under this call?

The SPEAKER. It is not embraced in the letter of the twenty-first rule, but the Chair is looking to see whether there has not been an amendment sustaining the right of a member to introduce such a resolution under this call.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask, then, that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see in one moment. [After a pause.] The Chair finds that it was decided in the Forty-third Congress that such a resolution might be introduced on the call of the States, although not embraced by the letter of the rule.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Does not the rule limit this call to the introduction of bills and resolutions only?

The SPEAKER. It does by its terms, but it has been decided by the House that a resolution proposing to amend the rules may be introduced under this call for reference only.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Is not that in violation of the rule?

The SPEAKER. That has been the practice, the Chair is advised, ever since that decision. The present occupant of the Chair might have decided otherwise, but he conforms to the practice of the House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let my resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be amended as follows:

"RULE —. That leave to print in the RECORD shall only be given at the time a subject is pending before the House for action and is under discussion, but such leave shall authorize remarks only on such subject, and shall not be first published in the RECORD after the adjournment of the session."

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Very well. Let me make a parliamentary inquiry in that connection. If this select committee is hereafter appointed may I ask to have the House recall the present reference and refer the joint resolution to the select committee?

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PHILADELPHIA BOARD OF TRADE,
MERCANTILE LIBRARY BUILDING, TENTH STREET, ABOVE CHESTNUT,
Philadelphia, December 10, 1883.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The following memorial respectfully showeth that:

At a meeting of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, on November 19, 1883, the methods to be adopted for the retention of our currency and its increase as the wants of the nation may require being under consideration, the following statements were submitted by a committee previously appointed to consider this subject. The views of the committee, having been approved, are now respectfully forwarded to your honorable bodies as the sense of this board.

The committee on currency and banking, to whom was referred the resolution directing them to report such amendments to the national-bank act as in their judgment should be made to prevent further withdrawals of currency, and to provide for additional issues as the demands of the nation may require, respectfully report—

That after carefully considering the subject, and obtaining the views of the financial and business men of our city, we find a general desire to retain the present national banking system, and to oppose any change which does not provide for the security of the circulation on a basis of Government bonds. What we believe would be most acceptable to the public would be the issue of United States bonds having twenty years to run, and bearing interest of not less than 2 per cent. per annum as a basis of circulation, and the repeal of the law taxing national-bank notes 1 per cent.

The committee are further of the opinion that the national-bank notes issued by the Government should be equal in amount to the par value of the bonds deposited.

They also find that the banks of our city are indifferent concerning the retention of their circulation, believing it to be of much more importance to the public than to themselves.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN WELSH, President.

GEO. L. BUZBY, Secretary.

Mr. SEWELL presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Veteran Zouaves, of Elizabeth, N. J., in favor of conferring the rank of General upon Philip H. Sheridan and the rank of Lieutenant-General upon Winfield Scott Hancock; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Oregon, if he will pardon him, that this appears to be a bill for relief on account of some maritime disaster.

ISRAEL DODGE'S LAND CLAIM.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas in the confirmation of the claim of Israel Dodge, or his legal representatives, for 6,002.50 acres by the act of June 21, 1860, it was provided in the second section that the location of the certificate to be issued in satisfaction of said confirmed claim "may be located upon any of the public lands of the United States subject to sale at private entry at a price not exceeding $1.25 per acre;" and

Whereas on the 22d day of December, 1865, a certificate of location was issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in full satisfaction of said claim, erroneously reciting the act of Congress approved June 2, 1858, as the authority for its issue; and

Whereas the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to correct this error of recital, by the issue of new certificates, provided that the new certificates should be "subject to all the provisions of the said act of June 21, 1860;" and

Whereas the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office on April 14, 1881, did issue new certificates locatable on unoffered lands and of more than ten times the value per acre of the original certificate: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands is hereby directed to investigate the issue of the said unauthorized certificates, with full authority to send for persons and papers; and the Secretary of the Interior, pending this investigation, is requested to suspend the issue of patents on the said certificates where located on unoffered lands, and to report to the Senate the facts in the matter as shown by his records and files, and whether any steps have been taken by him to secure the limitation of said certificates to lands subject to private entry only.

THE SINKING FUND.

Mr. BECK. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as soon as practicable the amount of the public debt of the United States after the sums provided for in the act of February 25, 1862, were obtained under its provisions, and how much said public debt has now been reduced beyond the amount required to be applied as a sinking fund by the provisions of sections 3694 and 3696 of the Revised Statutes, and to further inform the Senate what sums will hereafter be required annually until the maturity of the 4 per cent. bonds in 1907, in order to comply with the provisions of said section as now construed by his Department; stating how the amounts so required can be applied to the sinking fund prior to 1907.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MORGAN. I think I discover in the resolution the opening of a very important subject, one on which I confess I am not as well informed as I should like to be, and, unless it will disoblige the Senator from Kentucky, I should prefer that the resolution go over until to-morrow. I want to hear the Senator explain it if I can get him to do so.

Mr. BECK. I am prepared to explain it now. I can, however, do so better to-morrow morning, when it has been printed and Senators have examined it.

Mr. MORGAN. Then let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BECK. I agree that it is a very important resolution. I expect to show that we are now being required to collect from the people very large sums of money that can not be paid out on the public debt under the existing distribution of the bonds of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury tells us that we must place in his hands $50,000,000 a year to be applied to the sinking fund, when he and former Secretaries—Secretary Richardson, Secretary Morrill, and Secretary Sherman—have all assured us that we have already supplied means largely in excess of the requirements of the sinking fund in the payments already made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator that if the present consideration of the resolution is objected to debate is not in order.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; I only want to say one other word. We have since 1865 reduced the public debt over $1,200,000,000, when the sinking fund has not required over $600,000,000, or, at the utmost, $700,000,000, by any possible construction of it. I ask that the resolution be printed and lie on the table, and to-morrow morning I will explain it to the satisfaction of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed, under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before that is done I wish the indulgence of the Senate for a moment to make a reply to a remark which has been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Ohio proceeding upon this resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is not the slightest objection in any quarter to having the Senator from Kentucky fully informed upon the subjects-matter of this resolution; but I beg leave to inform him that in every report made by the Treasury Department for several years there is a full and detailed statement of the sinking fund. He is perfectly correct in stating that for some years prior to 1873 the amount paid on the sinking fund was much larger than the amount required by law; but all that is shown by tables, giving the fullest details, attached every year to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. I wish simply to say, therefore, that this information is not necessary to be called for, because it is communicated in the regular annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator will allow me I will state that I have the figures in full up to the report made by himself when he was Secretary of the Treasury, in 1878. Since then I might perhaps pick them out in a number of reports. But the valuable information I desire is to ascertain how the sinking fund, which the Secretary of the Treasury now tells us must be kept up to $50,000,000 annually, is to be applied, when all the bonds that we can pay up to 1891 will be exhausted at the present rate of taxation in three and a half years.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to having the information communicated to the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I am satisfied that the sinking fund is now being used to keep up taxation without cause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over under the rule, and it will be printed.

GEORGE A. CLARKE AND W. H. H. ST. JOHN.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mrs. Mary V. Quin, mother of George A. Clarke, deceased, late messenger in charge of the room of the Official Reporter of the Senate, the sum of $720, being an amount equal to six months' salary as messenger aforesaid; and to the widow of W. H. H. St. John, late messenger in charge of store-room, the sum of $600, being an amount equal to six months' salary as messenger aforesaid; the above sums to be considered as including the funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 1) extending the time fixed for the joint commission appointed to consider the number and salaries of officers and employés of the two Houses to submit their report; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the morning business is completed, and the Secretary will report the resolutions lying on the table from a previous day. The resolution offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. VOORHEES, December 10, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That, in the judgment of the Senate, a public debt is not a public blessing, and that any measure or financial policy looking to the perpetuation of the present interest-bearing national debt of this Government for the purposes of national banking, or on any other account, meets with the disapprobation of this body, and should be viewed with alarm by the tax-payers of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Indiana has been called temporarily out of the Chamber, and I ask that the resolution be passed over informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, if there be no objection, and the next resolution on the Calendar will be reported.

CLERKS FOR SENATORS.

The resolution submitted by Mr. BUTLER, December 10, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That each Senator, except the chairmen of standing or select committees of the Senate, shall be entitled to a clerk or secretary at a salary of $1,000 annually, the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senate is not ready to consider the resolution, would it be in order to allow it to lie over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution may lie on the table at the pleasure of the Senate or it may be referred to a committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that it lie on the table, to be called up by me hereafter.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar of General Orders is now completed. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] here, but I suggest as he is within call that the Senate proceed to consider the report of the Committee on Rules. I have no doubt that it would be agreeable to him. [Mr. FRYE entered the Chamber.] Ah, here he is present. I suggest that the report of the Committee on Rules be now taken up. We have more time to consider the proposed new rules now than probably we shall have again during the session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make a motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I will make the motion that the report be taken up, the Senator from Maine now being present to take charge of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to consider the report submitted by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GARLAND. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not press that motion. There are in the report sixty-seven pages of printed matter, double columns at that, and it was just laid on our tables about ten minutes ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would there be any objection, as the proposed rules are quite long, to their being formally read through so as to save us the time that would be occupied in the reading when they are taken up for consideration?

Mr. GARLAND. I think that we had better let the matter lie over until to-morrow, so that we may compare the proposed rules with the existing rules of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

Mr. GARLAND. The proposition I see here is at once to change pretty much the entire features of the book which has been our guide for some time. I should like to have a chance to read them over before they are read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that, the report having been made on a previous day, it is not subject to a single objection, but that it rests with the Senate to determine whether it shall consider the matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not press it against the desire of any Senator. I merely made the suggestion in the absence of the Senator from Maine in order to expedite business. It seems to me that the proposed rules ought to be acted upon, and I think that they ought to be adopted before we get into any real important business. Therefore I made the suggestion. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Maine notified the Senate that he would call up this report on Thursday, and it has just been laid on our tables. I have no objection to taking it up to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose we take it up to-morrow, to save time.

Mr. FRYE. Then, if allowed, I will give notice that I shall call up the report to-morrow. I proposed Thursday because I did not know certainly that it would be placed on Senators' desks to-day. It is here now, and, with the permission of the Chair, I should like to call the attention of Senators to it for one moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. The Senate will notice that on the left hand of each page there is printed the original rule; in the next column there are printed the amended forms proposed from time to time by Senators in the Senate; in the next column is found the present rule; and in the last the proposed rule. A very brief report accompanies the rules, and on page 39 Senators will find in the nature of a report memoranda to the Senate rules, and following the joint rules proposed Senators will find memoranda touching the joint rules on page 45, and on page 53 they will find a brief history of the joint rules of Congress, these memoranda and this history taking the place to a large extent of any extended report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from Maine to repeat, if he kindly will, the explanation that he just gave of the four columns crossing two pages; what is the first, what is the second, what is the third, and what is the fourth, in order that we may all perfectly understand it?

Mr. FRYE. The first is the original rule obtaining in the United States Senate in the earlier days.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, the rules of the very earliest sessions of the Senate?

Mr. FRYE. Of the very earliest sessions of the Senate. The second are propositions that have been made in the Senate from time to time for amendments to the rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But not carried into force?

Mr. FRYE. Not carried into force; not made rules. The third are the present rules.

Mr. HALE. Upon the next page?

Mr. FRYE. On the next page. The fourth are the proposed rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Recommended by the committee?

Mr. FRYE. Recommended by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that in reading we cross both pages?

Mr. FRYE. We cross both pages.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I understand it.

Mr. HALE. Let me understand one matter: Does my colleague propose to take this subject up and consider it in the order of the propositions found in the report?

Mr. FRYE. In the order found in the report, and I gave notice that I should call it up to-morrow. I do not regard my presence as any matter of importance in the discussion upon the rules, because there are Senators on the committee with me who are more familiar with the rules than I am; but I shall be necessarily absent to-morrow as a member of a national committee, where important matters are coming up in which I feel a deep interest.

Mr. EDMUNDS (in his seat). Stick to Thursday.

Mr. FRYE. I will withdraw my notice for to-morrow with the permission of the Senate, and give the notice for Thursday.

Mr. GARLAND. That is satisfactory.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 11, 1883.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

READING OF THE JOURNAL DISPENSED WITH.

At this point Mr. Speaker CARLISLE called to the chair Mr. COX, of New York, as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first business in order is the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. STORM. I move that the reading of the Journal of yesterday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore submitted the question to the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to say that the question of dispensing with the reading of the Journal can only be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can only be done by unanimous consent. The Chair has heard no objection. It will again submit the question whether there is objection to dispensing with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. MILLS. There can be no objection to dispensing with the reading of the Journal of yesterday, as it refers to mere formal matters.

Mr. KEIFER. I only wish to suggest that it ought not to be done except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it will take two hours to read the Journal, and if there be no objection it will be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CALL OF STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is to resume the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference, and the call will be resumed where it left off yesterday, at the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. SHELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business has been called for.

Mr. SHELLEY. I hope the gentleman calling for the regular order will withdraw it, as I wish to offer a resolution.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I demand the regular order of business, and if there be no other objection I will withdraw it.

Mr. SHELLEY. I will send my resolution up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 11, 1883.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message, together with the accompanying papers, will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAWES. I should think, as that calls for a special appropriation for particular reasons, perhaps it ought to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, in order that they may make known to the Committee on Appropriations the facts in reference to it. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, if there be no objection, the message of the President, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. It will go ultimately to the Committee on Appropriations; but it strikes me that under the circumstances it should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs first.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 19) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories, to report it with amendments. I shall call it up on the first occasion when I can get an opportunity to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

THE SINKING FUND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" there will be laid before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] yesterday which went over under the rule.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. BECK, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as soon as practicable the amount of the public debt of the United States after the sums provided for in the act of February 25, 1862, were obtained under its provisions, and how much said public debt has now been reduced beyond the amount required to be applied as a sinking fund by the provisions of sections 3694 and 3696 of the Revised Statutes, and to further inform the Senate what sums will hereafter be required annually until the maturity of the 4 per cent. bonds in 1907, in order to comply with the provisions of said section as now construed by his Department; stating how the amounts so required can be applied to the sinking fund prior to 1907.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I said yesterday that if any explanation was desired as to the object and scope of this resolution I would give it this morning. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is not now in his seat, made the inquiry. I do not now care to do so unless there is objection made to the passage of the resolution; but I will state that I desire the information for the use of the Committee on Finance, so that we may determine the basis upon which we shall seek to adjust the taxation of the country.

I desire at some time to say, and perhaps I may as well say it now, that it will be perfectly apparent that the request of the Secretary of the Treasury made in his report the other day, asking us to keep up taxation beyond the ordinary wants of the Government at least $50,000,000, to be applied to the sinking fund, ought not to be thought of. His report seems to me to furnish the basis for the statement I make, because he shows in a few words very clearly that—

> The only United States bonds which are now payable at the pleasure of the Government are the 3 percents, being $305,529,000; those which next become redeemable are the $250,000,000 of 4½ percents, on September 1, 1891. The $737,620,700 of 4 percents and the $325,850 of refunding certificates are redeemable July 1, 1907.
> The estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884 show a surplus revenue of $85,000,000 per annum. This is enough to pay all the 3 percents in about three and one-half years, and before the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887. This surplus, kept up for the four succeeding years, to September 1, 1891, would be more than $350,000,000, or $100,000,000 more than enough to pay all the bonds then falling due. The same annual surplus until July 1, 1907, would amount, with the $100,000,000 left after paying the 4½ percents, to about $1,460,000,000, while the whole amount of the debt then redeemable is less than $740,000,000. The estimated surplus of $85,000,000 a year would pay the whole amount of the interest-bearing debt in about fifteen years.

Therefore he very properly recommends that there shall be a reduction of taxation. He adds, speaking of the sinking fund:

> The estimate of the sinking fund for the current fiscal year is fixed at $45,816,741.47, and the amount required will increase from year to year at the rate of about $1,000,000 until 1891. It is estimated that an average of about $50,000,000 each year until then will be required for the sinking fund. This will vary according to the amount actually applied in payment beyond the need of the sinking fund.
> I consider, therefore, that in legislating for the future the revenues should not be so far reduced as to prevent the application each year of about $50,000,000 to the sinking fund. Upon the estimate of $85,000,000 as the surplus for the current year we find a surplus for that period of nearly $40,000,000, not wanted for the regular expenditures of the Government or for the payment of the national debt through the sinking fund.

The Secretary shows this condition of things: that $85,000,000 of the public debt will be paid during the current year, and $106,000,000 is estimated to be paid during the next fiscal year before we can reasonably hope to change existing laws, leaving only $109,000,000 possible to be paid, in accordance with the present adjustment of our bonds, until 1891; and if we are to keep up $50,000,000 a year for a supposed sinking fund, that $50,000,000, after applying the surplus of this year and the amount estimated for the next now provided for, will in two years, or in a small fraction over two years, pay off all we can possibly pay until 1891. There will be only $109,000,000 left after the now ascertained surplus up to June 30, 1885, is applied. In any event all the 3 per cent. bonds will be paid three or four years before we can pay any more, even if the provisions for the ever-pressing sinking fund are dispensed with.

In adjusting our taxation hereafter I insist that we shall not make provision for the hoarding of money that we can not properly apply; and I insist that the present construction given to the sinking-fund law is not legitimate, and was never intended to be construed as it now is by any legislation prior to 1875. For these reasons I have asked the Secretary to tell us, first, what the debt was in 1862, when the pledge, so called, as to a sinking fund was given. The law passed on the 25th of February, 1862, reads thus:

> SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all duties on imported goods shall be paid in coin, or in notes payable on demand heretofore authorized to be issued and by law receivable in payment of public dues, and the coin so paid shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows:
> First. To the payment in coin of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States.
> Second. To the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year after the 1st day of July, 1862, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct.

Under that act about five hundred million dollars was borrowed, perhaps five hundred and fifty million dollars.

Mr. BAYARD. May I draw the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the change made in the revision of the Statutes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BECK. Certainly; I am seeking information.

Mr. BAYARD. I do it to facilitate the Senator's statement. In the revision of the statutes the date recited in the second clause of this section "to the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year after the 1st day of July, 1862," does not find its place when carried into the revision of 1873, but it provides for "the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States to be made within each fiscal year," without limiting it to the date of July 1, 1862. I knew it was the purpose of the Senator from Kentucky to be accurate, and I thought possibly he had not adverted to the change by the transposition of the law from the Statutes at Large into the revision of the statutes.

Mr. BECK. I had not seen that, nor had I examined it with a critical eye, but I remember very well that the Revised Statutes professed (and therefore I did not examine and compare them as carefully as I perhaps otherwise should have done) simply to be a revision, without any alteration or any addition to or subtraction from existing law.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator knows that nevertheless very important and exceedingly important changes were wrought by the revision, whether intended or not. I merely refer to it for the purpose of assisting the statement of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. I read the law of February 25, 1862, for the purpose of showing what I meant by the first statement in the resolution, which reads:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate, as soon as practicable, the amount of the public debt of the United States after the sums provided for in the act of February 25, 1862, were obtained under its provisions.

The debt at that time was in my opinion—I do not know accurately, and therefore I desire the information—somewhere about $500,000,000 or $600,000,000. Now, we have these facts, upon which we do not require any information: that the debt kept increasing from February, 1862, until the 31st of August, 1865, when it reached the enormous sum of $2,756,431,571.43, and that by the last debt statement of December 1, 1883, the total debt of the United States on the 1st day of the current month, less cash in the Treasury, is $1,509,785,060.85, or a reduction since August, 1865, of $1,246,646,510.58. In other words, we have reduced the public debt as it existed on the 31st of August, 1865, more than double the total amount of the indebtedness of the United States on the day when this so-called pledge to create a sinking fund was originally given. The whole debt then did not amount to much over $600,000,000, and since we began reducing the debt after August 31, 1865, up to the present time we have paid $1,246,646,510.58, or more than double the whole original indebtedness.

It may as well be stated that there never was a sinking fund created or maintained, nor was the law of 1862 in any sense attempted to be complied with in that regard until 1870; yet nobody thought we were neglecting the public credit. Governor Boutwell, then Secretary of the Treasury, perhaps paid off a small sum in 1869; but in 1870, for the first time, the sinking fund was put in shape; and then many things were done, that I do not care to advert to, which caused great criticism, and I think did great wrong to the tax-payers of the country by the purchase of bonds unnecessarily and at enormous premiums.

Mr. Lot M. Morrill while Secretary of the Treasury made a report upon this whole subject which I hold in my hand—it is not very long, yet it is interesting in this connection—in which he shows that the public debt up to the date that he made his report had been reduced $656,000,000 in round numbers, and that under no possible state of the case could the grand total then due the sinking fund exceed $433,000,000, which left a surplus of $225,000,000 which had been paid off beyond what anybody would assume the sinking fund required.

Secretary Sherman said in his report in December, 1877:

In the last annual report (page 10) my predecessor stated that had the resources of the Treasury during each fiscal year, commencing with 1862, been sufficient to make a literal compliance with the conditions of the sinking-fund law practicable, a total of $433,848,215.37 would have been applied to that fund July 1, 1876, whereas the actual reduction of the debt, including accrued interest, less cash in the Treasury at that date, amounted to $658,992,226.44. On the same basis the amount in the sinking fund would have reached $475,318,888.78 on the 1st of July, 1877, on which date the reduction of the debt, including accrued interest, less cash in the Treasury, since its highest point in 1865, amounted to $696,273,348.17, or $220,954,459.39 in excess of the amount required by law to be provided for that fund.

The report to which Secretary Sherman refers is that of Hon. Lot M. Morrill, late Secretary of the Treasury, made to Congress in December, 1876, in which he says:

THE SINKING FUND.

By the terms of the act of February 25, 1862, it was provided that after the 1st day of July, 1862, 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States should be purchased or paid within each fiscal year, to be set apart as a sinking fund; also, that the interest on said fund should in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the debt. The sixth section of the act of July 14, 1870, also required that, in addition to other amounts to be applied to the redemption or payment of the public debt, an amount equal to the interest on all bonds belonging to the aforesaid sinking fund should be applied to the payment of the public debt.

From the time when the act first named was to go into effect until August 31, 1865, the demands upon the Treasury for expenses incident to the war were greatly in excess of the revenues of the Government, and therefore there was no surplus income which could be applied to the extinguishment of the debt or the creation of a sinking fund, and consequently the law providing for that fund was during that period necessarily rendered inoperative.

It will be noticed that the statute contemplated that a certain sum should be applied within each fiscal year to the account of the sinking fund. If the resources of the Treasury during each fiscal year, commencing with July, 1862, had been sufficient to have made a literal compliance with the conditions of the law practicable, the account would at the close of the last fiscal year have appeared upon the books of the Department as follows:

Amount for fiscal year 1863	$5,556,269 97
Amount for fiscal year 1864	12,184,090 52
Amount for fiscal year 1865	20,233,683 45
Amount for fiscal year 1866	30,490,707 15
Amount for fiscal year 1867	33,080,531 88
Amount for fiscal year 1868	33,736,306 85
Amount for fiscal year 1869	34,638,937 03
Amount for fiscal year 1870	35,959,651 99
Amount for fiscal year 1871	36,370,257 59
Amount for fiscal year 1872	36,507,573 43
Amount for fiscal year 1873	36,859,924 20
Amount for fiscal year 1874	38,012,930 63
Amount for fiscal year 1875	39,536,019 66
Amount for fiscal year 1876	40,681,331 02
Grand total	433,848,215 37

On the 31st of August, 1865, the public debt, as represented upon the books of the Department and shown by the public-debt statement, reached its highest point, namely:

Debt, less bonds issued to the various Pacific Railroad Companies and less cash in the Treasury	$2,756,431,571 43
On June 30, 1876, the debt, including accrued interest, less bonds issued to the Pacific Railroad Companies, and less cash in the Treasury, was	2,099,439,344 99
Reduction of the debt	656,992,226 44

The terms of the law of February 25, 1862, required by the operations of a sinking fund account that the public debt should be reduced in the sum of $433,848,215.37 between July 1, 1862, and the close of the last fiscal year. A reduction has been effected during that period of $656,992,226.44, or $223,144,011.07 more than was absolutely required.

It can therefore be said, as a matter of fact, that all of the pledges and obligations of the Government to make provision for the sinking fund and the cancellation of the public debt have been fully met and carried out.

Hon. William A. Richardson while Secretary of the Treasury published a book entitled Practical Information Concerning the Public Debt of the United States, with the National Banking Laws. Among other things he says:

The great revenues of the country in excess of the expenditures have enabled the Secretary to purchase bonds much more extensively than the sinking-fund law absolutely requires, and the debt has been more rapidly reduced than by the operation of that fund alone.

But the sinking fund itself will extinguish the entire national debt in about thirty years, or soon after the close of the nineteenth century, the exact time depending upon the price at which the purchases may be made in future.

Thus it will be seen that Secretary Sherman followed the next year with a similar report, and Secretary Richardson had made statements as well, that the great revenues of the country in excess of the expenditures had enabled the Secretary to purchase bonds much more extensively than the sinking-fund law required, and the debt had been more rapidly reduced than it could have been by the operation of that fund alone. Each of these Secretaries announced that we were far in advance of any of its requirements.

Now, instead of having reduced the debt six hundred and twenty-odd million dollars as it existed when Secretary Morrill and Secretary Sherman made their reports in 1876 and 1877, we have reduced it $1,246,000,000, and have only about $1,300,000,000 of interest-bearing debt existing, distributed as I have shown by the Secretary's report.

I am asking the Secretary of the Treasury now to tell us what is the exact amount, according to the system of book-keeping established in 1870, that the sinking fund has required shall be paid up to this date. We know what the aggregate reduction of the public debt is, and when we get that information (which of course I could figure out by working for a week or so through the various reports, still I might not get it accurately then, and my statement might be disputed) I think it will show that we have paid $700,000,000 of the public debt now beyond what any creditor could say good faith required us to do for the maintenance of the sinking fund under any law or any obligation, express or implied, that we had created. The official reports show that we have so arranged our bonds, and had so arranged them in 1870, prior to the adoption of the Revised Statutes, to which the Senator from Delaware called my attention, in such a way that no matter what revenues we collect, without buying bonds at a premium, if we can even buy them at any premium—for we can not compel men to sell—we can not pay any more than $300,000,000 of our debt before 1891, and then only $250,000,000 until 1907; and that all these arrangements were made in such a shape as to make it impossible to keep up the sinking fund and apply the surplus revenue to the payment of the debt in such a way as the Secretary of the Treasury now says we ought to do.

Therefore it is that I ask the Secretary of the Treasury further to tell us what sums will be hereafter required annually. He gives us a general guess of about $50,000,000 a year. I desire him to state as accurately as he can from the books of his Department what under their system will be required annually until the maturity of the 4 per cent. bonds in 1907. He tells us that the present surplus will give us $700,000,000 more than we require, and the sinking fund alone at $50,000,000 a year up to the time when the last bonds mature in 1907 will find in the Treasury of the United States, taken from the people by taxation, hundreds of millions of dollars that can not be applied to the payment of the debt if the absurd system suggested in this report of $50,000,000 to be kept up all the time is maintained. Therefore it is to show the absurdity of his recommendation that I ask him to inform us "what sums will hereafter be required annually until the maturity of the 4 per cent. bonds in 1907 in order to comply with the provisions of said sections as now construed by his Department, stating how the amounts so required can be applied to the sinking fund prior to 1907."

That is the whole resolution, and when we have these facts officially stated before us we can then determine what we ought to do in order to reduce taxation; whether we are going to follow the recommendation of the Secretary and collect from the people $50,000,000 a year for a sinking fund, when we have already collected from them over $700,000,000 more than anybody pretends could be applied to the sinking fund. It may as well be restated that our bonds were made redeemable at the periods now fixed long prior to the adoption of the Revised Statutes; and when there was no other law but the law of 1862 under which there was any pledge we had adjusted our bonds so that we could not pay the 4 percents until 1907 and the four-and-a-halfs until 1891; and, as I said, we have already provided now for the payment of all the balance under the present system of taxation within the next three years. It seems absurd to say that if we agree to pay $50,000,000 annually as a sinking fund, and have $100,000,000 surplus revenue, and purchase $50,000,000 of bonds on the 30th day of June and $50,000,000 on the 1st day of July we have complied with the law relative to the sinking fund for two years; but if we buy the whole $100,000,000 worth on the 30th day of June we owe $50,000,000 to the sinking fund for the fiscal year beginning that day. A Secretary of the Treasury might by his act change the obligations of the Government and its taxation to the extent of $50,000,000.

What I desire to get at is to show to the country and to show to the Senate that in the readjustment of taxation we ought now to say what every creditor of the United States wants us to say, that there is not only no necessity for keeping up taxation to the extent of paying fifty millions a year more than the legitimate expenses of the Government require, but that we ought to allow the outstanding bonds to remain, what few of them exist, as surety for the circulation of the national banks and for the many other business purposes for which they are needed, and to reduce taxation in some way, I do not care to say how now, and give the people the relief from taxation to which they are entitled.

The sinking fund has been fully, fairly provided for for fifteen or twenty years yet to come. We have canceled $700,000,000 at least beyond any requirement of law. As I said, the sinking fund was merely intended to give security or assurance to creditors that the debt would be paid. Who now doubts either our inclination or ability to do so? From 1862 to 1870 no fund was applied, and there never was since that time anything except the surplus revenue applied. The sinking-fund account was only a book-keeping invention of a Secretary. When the surplus was small but little was applied, and when it was greater of course more was applied. But the average, year by year, shows the total result in a reduction of $1,246,000,000, or nearly half of the whole national debt at its maximum; and it shows, in the existing condition of things, that there are hardly any bonds left to which we can apply it. I do not know what the present Secretary, or any future Secretary, might say under the authority given him to apply the surplus revenue "to the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year after the 1st day of July, 1862, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct;" that at the end of two or three years, when we can no longer purchase bonds, I do not know but he will consider it his duty to apply the surplus to the payment of the non-interest-bearing portion of the national debt, and pay off the greenback circulation, which is costing nothing, under the authority given him to pay when he has funds on hand.

I desire Congress to take the matter in its own hands and tell any Secretary, as we told him in the legislation of 1878, that he can not pay off the legal-tender greenback circulation, and to say to him that he shall not buy bonds not payable at any premium he pleases, and say to him that there is no use in taxing the people $50,000,000 annually, as he requests us to do, in order to create a sinking fund, which, as he shows himself, can not by possibility be used unless he does apply it to the payment of the non-interest-bearing legal-tender notes that are now outstanding—and that would not last him very long, only six years at the rate he proposes; it would not begin to bridge over the time until 1907—and that he shall not pay premiums to syndicates or others to get hold of bonds not due.

But I will say further that this sinking fund has always been made a pretense to increase taxation, and the effort now to keep it up to $50,000,000 a year is an effort to continue the present enormous rate of taxation under the pretext that the good faith of the Government requires it, when all the bondholders are begging not to have their bonds taken, and when we have been applying coercion in all sorts of indirect forms to force them to bring them in, and banks and others who hold them are begging to be allowed to retain them, and officers of banks and our officers are seeking every excuse they can to provide bonds on which banks of issue can be established. We are to take $50,000,000 annually in an effort to keep up taxation under the false pretense that the faith of the country requires us to pay debts not due, when no creditor wants it, when nobody denies that, having paid off over $1,200,000,000, we have doubly met all the requirements of the sinking fund.

Why, sir, we reduced tariff taxation in 1872 by requiring only 90 per cent. of what had been collected under the war tariff on most of the important schedules to be collected. We had previously repealed the tax on incomes and all the taxes on manufactures, indeed all the internal taxes that had been made an excuse for imposing additional tariff taxation, and the Republican Congress, under the lead of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, say they could not stand before the country on the basis of a war tariff, and they reduced taxation. They cut down the tax on tobacco; they reduced the tax on distilled spirits to 50 cents; but in a few years they wanted it restored, and in 1875 they raised the cry that the sinking fund was in danger—a false clamor. Statements were made, which I have here in the RECORD, pretending to show that only $140,000,000 had been applied to the sinking fund, and it was said the faith of the nation was pledged to its maintenance, and yet the very next year after Congress passed the law restoring the war tariff and increasing internal taxation Mr. MORRILL'S report showed we were $275,000,000 ahead of the requirements of the sinking fund, and Secretary Sherman indorsed it—the statement—next year, but the clamor had answered the purpose. They had secured the repeal of the tariff reduction of 1872, and the protected monopolists were happy by the restoration of the war tariff, which we have upon us yet, as I said.

The increases made in 1875 were under a law to protect the sinking fund, which raised the tax on distilled spirits from 50 to 90 cents a gallon and increased the tax on tobacco, and by which everything was brought up to the old war condition under pretense of protecting the sinking fund; and now the present Secretary is demanding that we shall collect fifty millions more than the ordinary expenses of the Government require, when he tells us that he can not use it for any purpose at all; all, of course, in order to keep up taxation fifty millions more than is necessary.

It is for the purpose of showing these facts, and many other things, that I desire accurate information from the Secretary as to the necessity for carrying out this recommendation. I know that when we meet in the Finance Committee of the Senate the Secretary's report will be read, and if any suggestion is made to reduce tariff taxation, in answer we shall be told, "You must stand by the requirements of the Government; you are going to starve the Government and endanger the credit of the nation if you do not," unless we have authoritative exhibits showing that these recommendations are not entitled to consideration.

When Senators examine the Secretary's report carefully, as I think I have, they will find many curious and inconsistent things, some of them striking in the right direction; he sees the difficulty, if we keep on buying bonds, of keeping up the security of the national-bank circulation based on them; he proposes to give them 95 per cent. of the market value of the bonds in currency, giving them a greater issue for fewer bonds—not the face value, but the market value, fluctuating according to the market price of the bonds, basing his security on the shifting condition of the market, as it might be in a case of war or trouble, from which no country is altogether free. He insists also on reducing the tax on circulation; and what is the explanation?

He bases his claim for a reduction of this tax on the ground that the Government makes at least $4,000,000 by the loss of the bank notes that it issued to the banks, and that as it makes that much money out of the banks it can afford to charge them less on circulation, which he admits ought to be charged for, because of what we make by the loss of the notes, when he knows, and every Senator knows, that there is no proof to show that those banks ever lost a dollar of the bank notes, any more than if they had been in the form of greenbacks and lost in the hands of the people, as the bank notes are, the Government would have had the same benefit from them as if they were in the form of bank notes; and what right have the national banks to credit for the loss?

Why, sir, only last year, or the year before, when we renewed the charters, and gave them all sorts of privileges, what did we do? Their former charters required them to pay off the notes within six months after going into liquidation; but the last act gave them three years, made them a present of the interest for the two and a half years when the money belonged to us by the original contract and charter. The loss of notes, all agreed, was not sustained by them, but was sustained by the people from whose pockets the notes were lost, or on whose bodies they were when they were drowned, or in whose house they were when they were destroyed. And yet the Secretary wants to reduce the tax on circulation upon the idea that the loss of these notes, amounting to $4,000,000, in twenty years, at a low calculation, is a loss by the banks, which the Government makes out of them.

In other words, you will find all through that the effort is not to reduce taxation, but to keep it up; or when it is reduced to reduce it in the interest of those who do not need any reduction made for their benefit. We have done everything for the banks that they asked. The system is working well, and they would rather now that the country should not draw in the two hundred out of three hundred millions of dollars of 3 percents of outstanding bonds which they hold and let the sinking fund go by for at least five or ten years, as we ought to do when we can not apply the money that we are collecting in that form, having no matured interest-bearing debt to which we can apply it.

But I have said more than I cared to say about this matter. I think Senators will see the propriety of ascertaining how much more we have already applied in the $1,246,000,000 we have already paid of the national debt beyond what the sinking fund requires. Let the Secretary tell us accurately how he is going to apply, year by year, $50,000,000 or any other number of millions to the sinking fund in the present condition of our bonds, having a surplus this year of $86,000,000 provided for; $106,000,000, he says, next year provided for, having only $109,000,000 left till 1891, and from 1891 to 1907 nothing.

Why not now reduce taxation upon the actual existing basis of things instead of raising a large fund which cannot be applied? Let the information when received be referred to the Committee on Finance, and then we shall have the basis on which we can adjust taxation, if we ever have the matter fairly brought before us. For that reason I seek the information now, and I hope the Senate will allow me to obtain it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I am sure that nobody in the Senate desires to deprive the Senator from Kentucky of all the information he can get on this subject, and I have no objection myself to the passage of this resolution; indeed, I hope now that it will pass, and that the Senator will get this information in just such form as he wants it. But I assure him, nevertheless, that the same information for which he calls now has been published year in and year out for many years; that it is in the book I now hold in my hand, which is last year's finance report, and it is in the book that was sent to us on the first day of this session attached to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. Every item of the purchase of bonds for the sinking fund, every element which enters into the computation, is contained here in detail. I said so yesterday, and I now beg leave to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the fact that he will find in last year's finance report, Table I, a table attached to the Secretary's report, this statement:

A statement showing the condition of the sinking fund from its institution in May, 1860, to and including June 30, 1882.

That "1860" should be 1868; it is a misprint, because then it commences with "July 1, 1868," and from that time up to last year, the date of sending in the report, there is a detailed statement of every item that enters into the sinking fund, the purchase of every bond or series of bonds from day to day. I notice the last on that table are the bonds purchased for the year 1881, and here is the amount of interest, the reduction of bonds of 1869; and so on, year by year, all the items are given showing the amount of bonds purchased each year for the sinking fund.

In addition to that, there is another table, called Table K, showing the amount of premium paid, the amount of principal redeemed, the net cost in currency, whether bought in gold or in currency, so as to show the cost of the bonds in detail; and that same information is contained in the report which was sent to us on the first of this month. Certainly there is no point of our public history, there is no transaction connected with our Government, that is more open, notorious, and public, and that is more freely communicated to this body and to the world at large than all the circumstances connected with the sinking fund. There are no transactions that are so simple in their operation.

The Senator has quoted the old act of 1862, which set aside 1 per cent. of the amount of the public debt as a sinking fund. That has always been construed to mean 1 per cent. of the amount of bonds due each and every year thereafter; not the amount of bonds due exactly on the day of the passage of that act, which was the 25th of February, 1862, but the amount of the entire public debt of the United States due from year to year, and the 1 per cent. is taken of the debt due at the time the statement is made up. So on the 1st of July, 1883, the amount of debt due then is so much; then to that is added the annual interest on bonds that have been redeemed from year to year, and these aggregate sums make up the amount annually appropriated by law for a sinking fund.

Therefore I say there is now in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury all the information that can possibly be given under the resolution except this:

Stating how the amounts so required can be applied to the sinking fund prior to 1907—

And also when the sinking fund will pay off the debt. That is a matter of uncertainty; it necessarily must be so from year to year. The officers may approximate an estimate of what the sinking fund will be next year and the year after, but they can not give you a statement of what it will be exactly, because that will depend upon the interest of the bonds that are redeemed subsequent to the making of this statement. If they redeem bonds bearing 4 per cent. interest, then the interest goes on to the credit of the sinking fund at 4 per cent.; if they redeem bonds bearing 3 per cent. interest, then the interest goes on upon the basis of 3 per cent.; and consequently it is not possible to state for the future exactly what the sinking fund will be from year to year, but they can approximate it, and the Secretary does substantially state that it may be so many millions for next year, but he can not tell exactly, because he can not tell precisely how many bonds he will buy during the coming fiscal year; nor at what rate of interest they shall be computed, and so it varies from time to time; but a substantial statement, an estimated statement of the sinking fund is carried on year by year, and can be carried on. I have no doubt according to the statements which are sent to us that the present sinking fund will pay off the public debt in about fourteen years or a little more. I am not quite sure about the period, for the operation goes on much less rapidly now than it formerly did, because the computation is based now upon an accumulation of 3 per cent. or 3½, or 4 per cent., while formerly it was based upon an accumulation of 5 or 6 per cent. It is impossible to state exactly the effect of the operation of a sinking fund unless you know all the elements that enter into the cost of the bonds, what is paid for them, what interest they bear, and what interest they will carry to the credit of the sinking fund.

The Secretary of the Treasury will simply no doubt give you his estimate of what the sinking fund will be next year and the year after, and so on, and when it will pay off the national debt gradually; but he can not tell certainly, because the elements vary according to the price of the bonds and the rate of interest the bonds bear at the time he purchases them.

But, sir, as the Senator seems to desire the information to be given in the form called for in his resolution, I have no objection. It will be communicated to him in that way probably more speedily than we shall have the formal documents printed.

Now, in regard to the continued payment of the sinking fund, it is true, as the Senator says, that the Government in time past has paid off more bonds than sufficient to satisfy the sinking fund.

Mr. BECK. How much?

Mr. SHERMAN. You call upon me suddenly for a statement. I should say two or three hundred million dollars.

Mr. BECK. It is just because I am very well convinced that it is over $700,000,000 that I desire the Secretary to tell us.

Mr. SHERMAN. The exact amount is shown by these very tables. I can not refer to them now in detail. I will say to him that up to 1873 we had gone largely in excess of the payment of the public debt, because the accumulated money in the Treasury had to be applied, after paying the current expenses, to the extinction of the debt, and was so applied. There was some question as to the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to buy bonds, but, from the necessity of the case, he had to exercise that power. In 1873 and thereafter, on account of the financial panic that occurred in that year, the revenues of the Government fell off so rapidly that the Government did not maintain the sinking fund. One year it only paid $6,000,000; another year, $15,000,000; it did not pay one-fourth or one-fifth of the sinking fund of those years; but in 1877 the revenues had so increased and the expenditures had been so diminished that we commenced again the process of paying off rapidly the public debt, and now for some years we have paid off much more of the public debt than is demanded by the sinking fund. As to precisely how much has been overpaid I can not state, but the question arises, has the Government of the United States, which has agreed to pay annually a certain sum, the right, in justice to its public faith so pledged, to apply a sum of money paid off in one year in excess of the sinking fund to make up a deficiency in a subsequent year?

I am inclined to think that in equity and fairness we may say that we are dealing with this question as a public question, and that when we do substantially equal to what we have agreed to do, that is a compliance with the law, and no man can question the faith of the United States because it for three or four years was unable, unprepared, from its current revenue to pay the sinking fund, provided it has on the whole more than substantially made good the promise. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky on that point, that as a question of public faith we have at least done what we agreed to do, and more too. But at the same time the policy of a continued payment of the public debt, the policy of standing by the public engagement to every year pay off so much—not less than 1 per cent. of the public debt—to the accumulated sinking fund, is a wise public policy, and I, for one, do not wish to see that interrupted. If there is a time when the revenue falls off and we are unable to do it, it ought to be only a temporary exigency. The law ought to stand, and the moment we can resume this public policy of paying off the national debt it should be resumed, until that debt is paid off to the uttermost farthing, according to the plain language of the law under which the debt was created.

Now, in regard to the other questions the Senator has discussed, I do not think it is necessary to go into them at this time. We shall undoubtedly be compelled to consider the practical question what provision should be made in regard to the national banks, whether the bonds held by them should be suddenly withdrawn without any opportunity or facility for getting other bonds, whether we have demanded unreasonable terms of security from the national banks, whether it is good policy or not to give them some modification of these existing provisions of law—when these questions come up I have no doubt we shall all be prepared to discuss them. But upon the main question of the policy of maintaining the honor of the country to the fullest extent in preserving our sinking fund intact—never to be departed from except where by a temporary stringency in the money market there may be a deficiency of the revenue, to be made good as soon as practicable, of continuing the steady and sure payment of the public debt until every dollar of it is extinguished—I am willing to stand. Upon that ground I agree with the Secretary of the Treasury. I believe that he and all those who agree with him are right, that this policy should be maintained according to the full letter of the law.

There is now no question about his power to purchase bonds. A law passed at a time when this Senate was Democratic, a law that was properly passed, upon the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to apply the surplus revenue to the purchase and payment of bonds whenever he has any surplus so to apply. So there is no question of power; and it is no doubt his duty, whenever there is a surplus of revenue in the Treasury more than sufficient to meet the funds required by the resumption act and to pay off the silver certificates and the gold certificates and the other demand liabilities of the Government, to apply that surplus revenue to the purchase of the public debt, and he must make the best terms he can; he must buy in open market. If the debt bears but 3 per cent. interest he must pay it off. He has no option. He must go on and carry out that policy.

It is right also that the policy proclaimed by the act of Congress to set aside a special fund, which may not be diminished except under extraordinary circumstances, and to apply that sum to the payment and gradual reduction and extinction of the public debt, should be carried out. Upon the other controverted question there is time enough to talk. I only wished to make good what I said before, that while I have no objection to the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky, yet I do not think there is any special occasion to call for the information, because it has already been communicated to us at the beginning of the session.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, one word only. The Senator said yesterday, and repeats to-day, that the official documents of this Government would furnish the information for which I ask up to the present time. I said yesterday, and repeated to-day, that up to the time that Secretary Morrill made his report and the Senator himself followed it I had tabulated statements showing what the facts were; that I had no doubt I could by going over volume after volume give what in my opinion was the amount overpaid beyond what the sinking fund required. But when I asked the Senator from Ohio to tell me what it was, he said two or three hundred millions. I said I thought that it was at least $700,000,000.

Now as between myself and the ex-Secretary of the Treasury, who is careful about these things, there is at least $400,000,000 difference as to what is the truth. He said himself, as Secretary, when we had paid off $656,000,000 of debt that we had overpaid the sinking fund $225,000,000. Now we have paid off $1,246,000,000 of the debt, and he says we have only paid the sinking fund two hundred or three hundred millions, when it is perfectly obvious that we have overpaid what is required for the sinking fund not less than $700,000,000. As he and I disagree about $400,000,000, is it not well before we meet in committee to discuss the position, to know exactly from the Secretary of the Treasury what the fact is, so that there may be no $400,000,000 difference between the Senator from Ohio and myself?

I want to establish that fact by authority; that once done, then the main part of the inquiry is why the Secretary says he needs $50,000,000 a year, and yet tells us he can not pay a dollar without buying the bonds in market beyond $100,000,000 after July, 1885, until 1891, and from 1891 to 1907 nothing after he exhausts the $250,000,000 due in 1891. I desire to know the facts as near as he can give them. He may not give it in exact dollars; he says about $50,000,000 a year. He can tell how he made that calculation. He can tell how soon he will exhaust the bonds now payable. Then when we meet in the Finance Committee we can see whether it is good policy to keep that condition of things up or not; and it is just because of the statement made by the Senator from Ohio that the Secretary has power to buy bonds not due at any premium he pleases that I desire legislation to prevent him from buying the bonds not due. The 4 percents of 1907 are now at 22 or 23 per cent. premium. Let it be understood that the Government has money to spare and that the Government is going to buy the bonds, and they will be at 30 or 40 per cent. premium. I would deny the power of any Secretary to pay 20, 30, or 40 per cent. premium to buy bonds which are only bringing 4 per cent., and levy taxes that are worth 10 to the people, independent of many other evils of that great increase of taxation beyond what is necessary. If you allow him to buy, I suppose some Secretary who feels like some Senators on this floor would buy up the legal-tender notes that bring no interest and absorb them all as soon as he had no bonds to buy.

These are the questions I desire this information for, and I desire to have legislation not to injure the public faith or to weaken the public credit, but to maintain both and at the same time to maintain proper and legitimate taxation for legitimate purposes, and not to be collecting fifty or sixty millions a year to buy bonds at a premium of 20, 30, or 40 per cent., or to buy the legal-tender notes of the Government which cost the people nothing and that everybody is content with, or to have it lie in the Treasury to tempt Congress to pass all sorts of measures to get clear of it, either to divide it among the States or to give it to the people for education in the States, or for any other claptrap to make any man an available candidate for the Presidency or anything else. I want the taxes now imposed to enrich favored classes reduced to the legitimate wants of this Government. I want the facts laid before us by authority upon which we can act in an honest effort to do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. HOAR. Let us dispose of the resolution now.

Mr. BECK. It may as well be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the consideration of the resolution will be continued. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I should be very glad to have this resolution adopted, but I should like to see it enlarged a little so that for the sake of entire comprehension of the subject by the public we may know the legal status of the sinking fund and what are the powers of the executive branch of this Government in dealing with the public finances. I deem it very important that, rapid as may be the extinguishment of the public debt, it should be under the forms and with the sanction of law. As far as the sanction of law may be required for the extinguishment of the public debt I suppose I am as ready to go as far as any one.

After the people of the United States had themselves resolved to take this fund in question into their own hands and by a condition of public affairs unprecedented in the history of any civilized government had resolved that they would themselves retain the obligations of the Government payable at the will of the Government and at a lower rate of interest than the face of those obligations called for,—when the people of the United States, as I say, in this unprecedented, voluntary manner signified their absolute confidence in their Government and in the public credit, and it became competent for the Treasury to extinguish the interest-bearing debt of the United States at the convenience of the Government, it was, as the Senator from Ohio said, upon my motion that an amendment was added to one of the appropriation bills, as I remember, authorizing any surplus in the Treasury to be applied to the extinguishment of the public debt. We were in that happy position, and are still in it, in which the debt was payable at the pleasure of the debtor and not at the will of the creditor. In such a state of affairs as that it was in my judgment a wise use of legislative power and of discretion to empower the Secretary of the Treasury to apply the surplus revenue to the extinguishment of the interest-bearing debt of the American people. We should have been delinquent in my judgment if such a provision had not been adopted.

I shall be very glad to see the whole history of this diminution of the public debt verified by a recapitulation from the Treasury and by a reference to the laws under which it has been accomplished. There were many years, from 1869 to 1874, in which I think a most disastrous policy was pursued. But it was pursued, and we have had indirectly the benefit of it, of paying off a debt long before it became due and paying an advance premium upon it to accomplish that object. It was one of those incredible policies in finance difficult to imagine the wisdom of at the time and impossible to see the wisdom of to-day; but the benefit of it nevertheless came. A part of the debt has been paid; the burdens of the public have been reduced although in a costly manner and injurious, I think, to the interests of the people. But that is all in the past, and I can only see by the true history brought now and anew before the people of this country benefit in every way to them by way of instruction and strengthening to the public credit of this country.

I therefore shall vote for this resolution of the Senator from Kentucky, and I only hope that the Secretary in complying with it will state the condition of the law under which he applies the surplus in the Treasury to the extinction of the public debt. There is nothing in that in my judgment that has not been warranted by the letter if not by the spirit of the statute of 1862. I do not think there is any force in the statement that that statute of 1862 contemplated only the debt existing at that period. This country was then engaged in a great struggle for the maintenance of its jurisdiction over the entire territory of the United States, and it was in the midst of that struggle, contemplating still further expenditure, that that promise was made. All statutes speak generally in futuro; they are not bound by the affairs of the moment; they will not be retrospective unless they expressly declare that intent upon their face; and no one I think can reasonably suppose that when the words "entire debt of the United States" were used they did not mean the entire public debt of the United States at any time it may exist, and so I suppose the construction has followed—the application of the money, the 1 per cent., to the diminution of that interest-bearing debt. But I also know that since that time, either by the direct instruction of Congress or the inferential construction of Congress, there has been authority for the diminution of the public debt by the application of the surplus revenue in the Treasury. I shall be very glad to have a recapitulation made of all that. I shall be very glad to have a recapitulation made of the statutory history under which this has been done, because it is impossible for us at all times to understand definitely these vast financial transactions, to comprehend what are our resources, and our resources may themselves be measured in proportion to our liabilities. We can best say what diminution in the burdens of taxation may then be made, and I probably shall be found agreeing with my friend from Kentucky in favor of lessening the public taxation as much as possible. There may possibly be some results from his refusal to extinguish the bonded debt of the United States that he has not fully contemplated, and I think he will find allies of an unexpected kind in favor of his proposition of maintaining the bonded debt, not paying it off at a premium, that he does not now anticipate. That, however, the future will disclose.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, we seem to be engaged in a discussion about the sinking fund, but as I understand practically it has not been for many years anything but simply a matter of book-keeping. There has been a certain amount of money applied—at all events for many years—on the books of the Treasury in excess of the amount required by what is technically called the sinking fund; but I understand that practically no dollar of money ever went into it—neither a dollar in money nor a single bond of the United States; and consequently the sinking fund has simply been something represented by certain entries on the books of the Treasury but nothing in the vaults of the Treasury; and it is a fiction that is proposed to be kept up.

The fact that the people of the United States have dealt with this matter has been the extinction of the public debt. They have seen that go on rapidly and have only been sorry it did not go on more rapidly. I believe that, outside of the persons who are interested in maintaining the national banking system and who have some sort of idea that a national debt is a national blessing, the great mass of the people of the Unitad States—90 per cent. of them I have no doubt—would hail with joy the extinguishment of the last dollar of that debt and at the earliest possible moment of time. For that purpose they have paid and are paying now without murmuring, as they always have paid, the taxes that are used and applied to that purpose. If I were to criticise the Secretary of the Treasury it would be because he has not extinguished the debt fast enough.

In the first place, I could never understand why he has to keep money on hand, an accumulation of $15,000,000 or $10,000,000, before he feels called upon to call in bonds, say for a million dollars. I never could understand, when he knows what the revenues will be just as well to-day for next month as when next month comes, why he did not issue a call saying, "I will pay so many millions a week," thereby relieving the Treasury from the payment of unnecessary interest. I believe a calculation, and not a very close one, would determine that the Secretary of the Treasury has paid more than $15,000,000 of unnecessary interest during the past ten years because a policy of that kind was not pursued, and large sums of money were taken out of the currency of the country and hoarded until multiples of ten, fifteen, and twenty millions were accumulated in that way before even a notice was issued, and then the notice would be for sixty or ninety days, and another accumulation of like amount would occur before payment would be made. It seems to me that there is a manifest indisposition to pay this debt on the part of those charged with that very solemn duty in an executive capacity. I believe that the people of the United States want this payment to go on with an accelerating ratio, if possible, until it is all paid.

Now, the Senator from Kentucky says we have only three hundred million to pay, and he does not want $50,000,000 annually levied to pay that off, because it will be paid off in six years; and he makes, as I understand, a complaint that we have paid bonds that we did not need to pay. This matter is dwarfed, according to his comprehension and statement, into a controversy between the bondholders and the Government, as if the bondholders were struggling to hold on to their bonds and had some sort of right to hold on. I never have understood it that way. I do not believe it is a question in which the bondholders have any interest, legal or moral, to be considered. The debt that we are now paying is a debt that was due at the option of the Government. It is not any concern to me whether a bondholder wants his bonds paid or not. I do not think the Government of the United States ought to furnish some man a safe and profitable way of using his money. Therefore I think that the bondholder himself may be entirely left out of the account. The matter of the payment of the debt is a question of public policy, not a question as to whether a man who has the bonds of the Government wants his money or not.

If we pay $50,000,000 a year for six years, that carries us down to 1890 before the $300,000,000 which are now due at the option of the Government are paid. It will be only one more year before we shall reach the four-and-a-halfs due in 1891 at that rate. There may be a great many contingencies, I know, between now and then that will diminish the revenues of the Government below even $50,000,000 in excess of the requirements of current expenditures; but even if there were not, in two years from now the premium on the 4½ per cent. bonds will begin to diminish. It is not now 121 but about 112; the premium is about 12 per cent. When we get to a point where the rate of interest represented by the principal and premium on the bonds is less than 2 per cent. the premium will go down; money will bring at least 2 per cent. per annum; and in 1889 or 1890, when we shall have paid off the remainder of the 3 per cent. bonds, if this reduction goes on at the rate of $50,000,000 per annum, the premium on 4½ per cent. bonds will not exceed 2 per cent., and I would not be willing, as far as I am concerned, that a matter of 2 per cent., or 5 per cent. either, should stop the payment of the public debt. Money is worth what it costs in the market to get it. The people are now paying money into the Treasury that is worth more to them than the 3 per cent. which it is saving to the Government in the discharge of the public debt, but they are paying it willingly, and they will pay it when that rate of interest shall be reduced and is not more than 2 per cent., and just as willingly as they pay it now.

Then at that particular time there will come this option to the Government of paying this $250,000,000 of 4½ per cent. bonds then to be due or of continuing them. We shall be confronted with the same plan we were confronted with here when the 6 percents and 5 percents became due, and that is to issue another bond to run for a term of years in order to avoid the necessity or the obligation of paying off the debt too soon. I do not believe that any Congress of the United States representing the people will vote to issue another bond, and when those 4½ per cent. bonds become due I want the Government to be ready to take up a considerable portion of them and continue the reduction from day to day and from time to time until they are speedily taken up, and nothing will meet, as I think, the popular demand of this country which in any way puts the Government in a condition where it can not go on with the extinction of the national debt.

The national banking system has been alluded to here as one of the beneficiaries of the continuance of the debt. It is simply a question as to whether a boy shall continue to wear his jacket after he has outgrown it or whether he shall keep on wearing it until it gets tighter and tighter for two or three years longer. The United States do not need to keep up a debt for the purpose of keeping up a national banking system. It has manifested that by paying off the debt. The national banking system is just as certainly doomed as the payment of the national debt goes on; I mean the national banking system as a provider of currency for the people of the United States. That is inevitable even if the debt were not diminishing, because the demands of this country for currency are constantly increasing, and a system which simply halts and stands still and does not furnish currency according to the increasing needs of the people would itself be condemned in a very short time as being inadequate for the purpose for which it was created.

If the element of flexibility, if the element of extension, is left out of the national-bank system, it possesses no merit whatever, because it goes without saying, I think, that the Government of the United States can issue a piece of paper directly, which shall be of as great value, as perfectly safe, as absolutely current as a national bank can issue, because it comes back to the same source. So, therefore, the national-bank system, both because it can not enlarge now, even if the reduction of the public debt was to stop, would prove inadequate for the future, and because of the fact that the bonds are to be paid and entirely wiped out, and that very soon, preventing it even from maintaining its present status for any length of time. For these two reasons that system might as well be left out of account in any prognostication about the public debt. Something else must take its place. And it is the wisdom of statesmanship, of good judgment, of patriotism to provide now, or to begin to provide now, for something which shall take its place.

Mr. BECK. Before the Senator sits down, will he allow me to correct a misapprehension on his part or mine in regard to this matter? I agree with him in much that he has said about the sinking fund never having been kept in any other form except applying the surplus. That is all that has been or that ever will be done, no matter what you call it. It is only the surplus that ever will be applied or ever was applied.

What I want him to tell me is how, having placed the bonds as we have, we are going to pay the four-and-a-halfs before 1891 without paying any premium the holders may see fit to ask for the $250,000,000, and how we are going to pay the $736,000,000 of fours which do not fall due until 1907, which I believe are now at 22 per cent. premium, until they mature. It will be observed by the Secretary's report that we paid during the last fiscal year $134,000,000 of the public debt. It is so adjusted now that by the 1st day of next July we shall certainly pay off $85,000,000 and the next year $106,000,000, so that we shall only have about $100,000,000 at the close of the fiscal year beginning next July to be paid. If we had $100,000,000 of surplus, and paid it all on the 30th day of June to the sinking fund of $50,000,000, then we should owe $50,000,000 for next year; but if we paid $50,000,000 on the 30th of June and $50,000,000 on the 1st day of July, then we have complied with the requirement of the sinking fund for two years! That is the construction given by the Treasury Department. It is absolutely absurd, in my judgment. We have nothing but $100,000,000 to deal with in eighteen months from this time under the present system of taxation till 1891. Why, then, go on and lay by $50,000,000 a year?

Mr. PLUMB. I am afraid the disposition of the Senator from Kentucky is to jump the stile before he comes to it. No one can tell what the next fiscal year will bring forth in the shape of revenue. We may not have $50,000,000; we may not have $25,000,000; but, as I said, the premium on the 4½ percents will begin presently to decline. After a while the current rate of interest may be 2 per cent. on securities of that kind. It will not do violence, I think, to the wishes of the people of the United States to pay them off if the rate of interest to be paid by the Treasury in exchanging the money for these bonds shall be as much as 2 per cent. even. But that is in the future. It will be four years at least before, under any possible circumstances, we shall come to a point where the 3 per cent. bonds will have entirely disappeared. It is more likely to be five years, or perhaps six years, before we arrive at that time under the present rate of taxation.

For that reason it seems to me this matter should be left to go until it becomes a practical question, which it certainly will not be until after another Congress shall have assembled, and perhaps not until it shall have finally adjourned. The proper way to provide for it is to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to buy the 4½ per cent. bonds at the current price in the market, which can not under any event exceed 4 or 5 per cent. then I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BAYARD. I offer an amendment, which I understand is approved by the Senator from Kentucky, to add:

And report under what provisions of law the reduction of the public debt has been effected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks the indulgence of the Senate to call its attention to the provisions of law regarding the appointment of the Committee on Printing. Section 3756 of the Revised Statutes provides that there shall be a Joint Committee on Public Printing, consisting of three members of the Senate "appointed by the President of the Senate," and three members of the House of Representatives appointed by the Speaker, &c. The rules of the Senate provide for the appointment, as with the other committees, of a committee of precisely the same character and the same number of Senators, to be appointed by ballot, unless by unanimous consent, as is usually the case. To avoid all questions about accounts at the Treasury, and without making it a precedent as to the power of the Senate, the Chair thinks it safe, if there be no objection, to appoint the same gentlemen who have already been elected by the Senate to be members of this committee, namely, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. GORMAN. The Chair repeats his statement that he does this not to be drawn into precedent on the question of how far the law can control the action of the two Houses in the appointment of their committees.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT—CIVIL RIGHTS.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, on the second day of the session I introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which is Senate joint resolution No. 5, and at the time gave notice that I desired to call it up at an early day for the purpose of presenting some observations on it to the Senate, after which it was my purpose to move its reference to the Judiciary Committee. If it be the pleasure of the Senate I should like to have the resolution taken up now in order that I may submit some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of joint resolution (S. R. 5) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XVI.

Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to protect citizens of the United States in the exercise and enjoyment of their rights, privileges, and immunities, and to assure to them the equal protection of the laws.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, two obligations result from the establishment of government. These are allegiance and protection. Without the former, government can not fully effect the purpose of its creation. Without the latter, the citizen can not rightly observe his duty. The two obligations are reciprocal. They are coextensive. The former embraces both service and obedience; the latter, defense and justice. Whosoever owes allegiance in the sense in which the term is here used is a citizen, and whosoever is a citizen is entitled to protection.

This is the doctrine of our Constitution. It is the doctrine of that old document through which the originators of this Government presented their case to the judgment of the world in obedience to a "decent respect to the opinions of mankind." And it was not an idle play upon words nor an unmeaning resort to attractive phraseology which led them to declare that—

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundations on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

This general declaration of doctrine harmonizes with the reciprocal character of allegiance and protection. And it was because of this that the framers of our Constitution projected that definite and comprehensive declaration of purpose formulated in the preamble to that instrument in the words:

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

These ends could not be wholly attained except through the co-operative observance of the reciprocal obligations of allegiance and protection. We did not need the hard lessons and awful experience which came to this nation to affirm the correctness of the principle here stated. The broken columns of other nations were evidences sufficient had we but heeded them; for no people has continuously enjoyed the ends of government as enumerated in the preamble to our Constitution without the co-operation of allegiance and protection. Nor will it ever be otherwise. Nor can this co-operation ever be had by mere declaration of right theories concerning it. It needs the solid food of fact accomplished to assure its healthful action and fix its best results. Hearty allegiance brings peace, security, and power to a government. Effective protection gives contentment, industry, and prosperity to the people. When these conditions coexist the supreme end of government is reached; but when they do not, then we have that other result described by Dr. Lieber in his masterly work on political ethics when he says:

Where men, of whatsoever condition—rulers or ruled, those that toil or those that enjoy, individually, by entire classes, or as nations—claim, maintain, or establish rights without acknowledging corresponding and parallel obligations, there is oppression, lawlessness, and disorder; and the very ground on which the idea of all right forever rests—the ground of mutuality or reciprocity, whether considered in the light of ethics or of natural law—must sink from under it.

The obligation of allegiance in its extremest action holds both the life and property of the citizen subordinate to the necessities of the Government. If the public enemy threatens the Government, the obligation of allegiance may command the presence of the citizen in the army. The price of obedience may be his life. If he by private act should disturb the order of society his life may be the forfeit, and the taxing power of the Government may consume his property. The obligation covers the service, duty, and possessions, of whatsoever character they may be, of the citizen. There is no limit but that of necessity. And who can say that this is not limitless? At least will all admit that within the organized powers, including both those which are expressed and those that are implied, nothing is exempt from the obligation of allegiance.

On the other hand, standing as a perpetual, alert, sleepless presence is the obligation of protection. It has the right to command the requisite, even to the utmost, powers of the Government in behalf of the citizen as a reciprocal return for his observance of the obligation of allegiance. And when this is denied then are the foundations of revolution laid. Then it is that the Declaration of Independence comes with the prodigious force of the words which declare:

That, when any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundations on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

And what is the right of the whole, or of a considerable number of the people, is the right of each citizen. Not that a single citizen can inaugurate a revolution or alter or abolish a form of government and found a new one, but that his right to protection is the same as that of the multitude, and its denial is as hateful as if aimed at the many. Each citizen is ready to admit the truth and force of this doctrine and to apply it in his own defense; and what each would do for himself it is unbecoming in him to refuse to others. The firm lodgment which this doctrine has had in the American mind has ever found expression in the promptness with which the people of this country have extended demonstrative sympathy to the populations of other lands in their movements against systems of oppression and unjust laws. This was characteristic of us even during the period when we were practicing the most flagrant injustice of modern times by holding millions of men in the condition of slavery. And the presence of this latter fact in our case would have caused active manifestations of rejoicing and approval in every civilized country on the globe had a servile insurrection occurred in the United States. Nor could we in such case consistently have remonstrated with the rejoicing millions of other lands; for such a calamity would have been but a logical result springing from our own doctrines and practices. And the true wonder is that it never befell us.

Our practices, so far as they concerned those millions of slaves, formed a consecutive burlesque of the doctrines on which we had founded our Government. The doctrines were correct; but our practices in the matter indicated were so supremely wrong that the sword ultimately remonstrated, and the trial by battle put an end to them forever. The doctrines were right, because, in my judgment, as formulated in our Constitution, they embodied and organized the two obligations of which I have spoken. And no one who carefully studies the unfolding of our national case when this Republic took its place in the line of nations and commenced its march of independent action can well doubt that it was believed that the exceptional element of slavery would pass away under the pressure of the peaceful, orderly, and just instrumentalities of our vigorous and aggressive civilization. And so, in my judgment, the Constitution was made to meet the conditions that should be present when slavery had passed away and every man had become a freeman and a citizen equal with all others. It was not anticipated that a thing so foreign to the principles of the Declaration and of the Constitution as slavery was would ever become a masterful spirit in our national affairs. No more was this anticipated than was that awful process through which slavery passed away, and in its passing opened the gates for all men to approach the Constitution and claim its protection in return for their allegiance. This complication of political phenomena was unlooked for; and it is not a matter of surprise to me that it evolved some of the bewilderments concerning the true character of our Constitution to be found in occasional judicial and political interpretations of the meaning and purpose of that instrument. But it is not my purpose to enter upon the field of discussion here suggested. It would serve no present practical purpose. I am content to take and use the facts as I find them, letting our inconsistencies relative to slavery in a republic keep their hiding places in the past, while we turn our attention to things which concern us now.

During the progress of the war of the rebellion steps were taken to abolish slavery. Before all of the States had resumed their proper positions as members of the Union slavery had disappeared, and a new complication presented itself to many minds. The slaves were free. There were several millions of them. Were they citizens? I do not doubt that they were. At the time referred to I did not doubt that they were native-born citizens. But there was some confusion of belief on this point. It was determined to settle the question. It was settled by the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution, which, among other things, provides that—

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the States wherein they reside.

This should have been of itself sufficient to have settled the entire controversy. In direct terms it did determine who is a citizen. To each person thus declared a citizen the obligation of allegiance attached, and by every right intendment this established in behalf of each citizen the reciprocal obligation of protection. This is both the philosophy and ethics of government. There is no escape from the logic of the case. It may be disregarded, but the rule stands as a perpetual rebuke to those who do it violence. The obligation of allegiance is one which the government may enforce against the citizen to the extremity of life and property, as I have already stated. It does not need a special delegation of power to authorize the enforcement. It is one of the necessities of government. It is an inherent power. Without it government can not exist. It is to the government what the natural right of self-defense is to the individual. Hence the necessities of the purposes for which government is organized are the limitations of its power to enforce the obligation of allegiance. And the purposes for which this Government was ordained are:

> To form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.

It is to the necessities of these great purposes that the Government may apply its power, through the instrumentalities provided by the Constitution, to enforce the obligation of allegiance. These instrumentalities are the three departments of government. In them inhere, from the very necessity of the case, the power to organize, administer, and enforce those things which are requisite to such an observance of the obligation of allegiance in such manner and to such degree as may enable the Government to effect the purposes of its creation.

But the Congress and the States when they made the amendment to the Constitution to which I am now addressing my attention, recognizing the complicated political phenomena occasioned by the judicial and political interpretations to which I have alluded, resolved to put the case beyond the lines of dispute, and to that end placed the fifth section in the fourteenth article in these words:

> The Congress shall have the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article.

Why was this done? What is the office of this section? But one answer can be given to these questions. That section was made a part of the Constitution in order definitely to determine the power of Congress to provide means for the full discharge of the obligation of protection to the citizen in return for the obligation of allegiance resting on him. Not because the power so to do did not inhere in the Government, but because a conflict of opinion had arisen, as I have suggested. This conflict was a fact, whether well founded or not, and it was deemed wisest and best to meet it and put it out of the case with such a constitutional fact as the fifth section of the fourteenth article.

When this was done the Government had just completed one of those prodigious tests of power which rarely arouse the energies of nations. In the course of this test it had supplemented the spirit of patriotism that readily filled the ranks of the Union armies in the earlier years of the war by the voluntary action of our citizens with a resort to that compulsion which recognized no excuse except one of a public character. The conscription act was inexorable. Not home, nor ease, nor pleasure, nor business, nor private interest, nor race, nor color, nor riches, nor poverty, nor learning, nor ignorance could successfully stand in opposition to the command with which the conscription ordered the citizen into the ranks of the Army. A common line of citizenship surrounded all, and a common obligation of allegiance rested on all. An equality which knew no degrees or groups fixed the status of each. It was on this basis the Government planted itself during the dreadful years of the war, and we may not wonder now that Congress and the nation were anxious at the close of the struggle that there should be no ground on which even hypercriticism could plant itself to question the protective power of the Republic. The conflict of opinion which affected the status of the millions of our population who had emerged from slavery rendered it especially desirable that no doubt in this regard should remain. It was plain so far as those millions were concerned, as well as all the members of their race in this country who had not been subject to the supreme oppression of slavery, that some protective laws would be needed which had not theretofore been resorted to. Those people were freighted down with the crushing burdens of ignorance, prejudice, race distinctions, lines of caste, and disabilities evolved by two centuries of slavery. But they were citizens, and entitled to the equal protection of the laws. Hence article 14 of the Constitution and its reassertion of the protective powers of Congress.

But the Constitution will not execute itself. Hence the enactment of the law of March 1, 1875, commonly known as the civil-rights act. It was not expected that that act would at once dispel the race antagonism which centuries of slavery had intensified. But it was expected that by supplementing the kindly and humanizing offices of passing years with a protective law of the character of the one enacted the right end would come in time. This because most men are readily affected by the conservative influences of time, while the many not thus affected yield, more or less implicitly, to the commands of definite laws, especially if they be supported by penal sanctions. That these expectations were not unreasonable is evidenced by the gradual growth of a better understanding between the two races since the close of the war, but more especially since the adoption of article 14 of the Constitution and the enactment of the so-called civil-rights law. Could these conditions have been preserved without judicial or other governmental disturbance, our advance toward a realization of that equal citizenship which alone can establish a desirable harmony between the two races in this country would have been much more rapid in the future than it has been in the past. For while the civil-rights act gave a sense of security to the colored citizen by reason of the very fact that it was on the statute-book, thus evidencing to him that the Government really meant to afford him protection, the white citizen was becoming more and more reconciled to the terms which said act imposed on all alike. And I am not of those who wonder that we are not further advanced in this direction than we are. It is not an easy thing to eradicate the prejudices of two centuries. When I consider the condition of the colored race in this country before the war, and then regard the changes in all respects which have come to its members since that event, I can but rejoice that so much has been done; and I take courage in participating in all right attempts to effect still more for them. Nor do I doubt that an end accepted by all, and satisfactory to all, will be reached at a day not greatly distant.

The civil rights act of March 1, 1875, was not a very radical measure. It entered on no experimental field of governmental action. The first section of the act declared:

> That all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, facilities, advantages, and privileges of inns, public conveyances on land or water, theaters, and other places of public amusement; subject only to the conditions and limitations established by law, and applicable alike to citizens of every race and color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude.

The second section provided certain penal sanctions and for civil action by the aggrieved persons for the recovery of a definite sum of money.

The Supreme Court of the United States recently decided this legislation of Congress unconstitutional, and therefore void. Undoubtedly this decision is the law of the five cases decided; for it is the judgment of the court of last resort concerning them. But while it must be accepted as the law in those cases, is it good law? Is it such law as ought to become the settled rule of this Government? Is it in harmony with the principles of this Government? Is it a right interpretation of the Constitution? If it is, then we can not too speedily take such orderly steps as may lead to a realization of the purposes this nation had in mind when it adopted the fourteenth article of the Constitution as an amendment thereto. It was the belief of the nation when it adopted that amendment that it had removed the obstacles which interpretation and practice had interposed between the equality of the obligation of allegiance and the obligation of protection; and that for the future there could be such harmonious co-operation of those two obligations as would effect the true office of government. The Supreme Court in the civil-rights cases says this is all a mistake. The language employed by the court in announcing this result is as follows, namely:

The first section of the fourteenth amendment (which is the one relied on), after declaring who shall be citizens of the United States and of the several States, is prohibitory in its character, and prohibitory upon the States. It declares that "no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." It is State action of a particular character that is prohibited. Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject-matter of the amendment. It has a deeper and broader scope. It nullifies and makes void all State legislation and State action of every kind which impairs the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, or which injures them in life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or which denies them the equal protection of the laws. It not only does this, but in order that the national will thus declared may not be a mere brutum fulmen, the last section of the amendment invests Congress with power to enforce it by appropriate legislation. To enforce what? To enforce the prohibition. To adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited State laws and State acts, and thus to render them effectually null, void, and innocuous. This is the legislative power conferred on Congress, and it is the whole of it. It does not invest Congress with the power to legislate upon subjects which are within the domain of State legislation, but to provide modes of relief against State legislation or State action of the kind referred to. It does not authorize Congress to create a code of municipal law for the regulation of private rights, but to provide modes of redress against the operation of State laws and the action of State officers, executive or judicial, when these are subversive of the fundamental rights specified in the amendment. Positive rights and privileges are undoubtedly secured by the fourteenth amendment; but they are secured by way of prohibition against State laws and State proceedings affecting those rights and privileges and by power given to Congress to legislate for the purpose of carrying such prohibition into effect; and such legislation must necessarily be predicated upon supposed State laws or proceedings, and be directed to the correction of their operation and effect.

I have given this extended quotation from the opinion of the court in order to get the full force of its position clearly before us. It gives a complete presentation of the position of the court, and from which it pronounces the act of March 1, 1875, unconstitutional and void. The argument of the opinion is wholly in support of this position. But if the premises stated are not correct the reasoning employed in their support can not bring us to a sound conclusion. What are the premises? Why, first, that the amendment is a limitation on the powers of the States; second, that unless the States affirmatively exercise the prohibited powers Congress can not enact remedial or protective legislation. The reasoning in support of these premises is, in substance, an effort to show that the States have not acted affirmatively. The conclusion, therefore, is that Congress exceeded its constitutional power in the passage of the act in question.

It does not seem to me that this is true. It does seem to me that the premises are unsound, and, consequently, the conclusion erroneous. It is a strange doctrine which asserts that a State, by refusing or neglecting to extend the equal protection of the laws to all citizens of the United States within its borders, can thereby suspend the power of Congress to enforce the fourteenth article of the Constitution. A State can not be punished for withholding the equal protection of the laws. It is not a being to which penal sanctions can be applied. There is no process that can be issued compelling a State Legislature to enact a law. The State judges can not be proceeded against for not enforcing a law not in existence. The executive and ministerial officers of a State can not be punished for neglecting to enforce a law which has no being. The State simply refuses or neglects to act. It merely converts itself, its legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and all that they embrace and control, into a mass of political and governmental inertia. What can Congress do? The court says nothing can be done; that this state of inactivity can not be disturbed; and that the fact of its presence constitutes a barrier which the power of Congress can not surmount. The fact exists that the equal protection of the laws is not accorded to all citizens. It is not denied by State laws nor withheld by State acts or proceedings. The State makes no law; it does not act, it does not proceed. The State is asleep. Its Legislature is asleep. Its executive department is asleep. Its judicial department is asleep. We must not wake them up because they are asleep. All of the powers of the State are dormant so far as concerns the right of colored citizens to an equal protection of the laws. We must stand aside, inactive, powerless; and so the fourteenth article of the Constitution becomes and remains a brutum fulmen.

It is true the court says of the amendment:

It nullifies and makes void all State legislation and State action of every kind which impairs the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, or which injures them in life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or which denies to them the equal protection of the laws.

But suppose the State has made no such law, has performed no such act, and in these regards simply remains motionless. What then? Why, the court says that the amendment not only declares the things stated in the language quoted, but it does more:

It not only does this—

but in order that the national will thus declared may not be a mere brutum fulmen, the last section of the amendment invests Congress with power to enforce it by appropriate legislation.

If this declaration stood alone, or had support in any other part of the opinion, the citizen would seem to have some ground on which to base a hope that an effective remedy may come to him at last, and that the voice of the nation might be uttered in tones sufficiently pronounced to wake the sleeping State; that Congress might supply the cause which should put motion into the inertia representing the State, or at least give remedy in the courts of the nation, or quicken the sense of duty of the offending inhabitants who had taken refuge under the bed of the sleeping State, by an application of the penal sanctions of national law. But the court says, "No, this may not be," and startles us with the question, "To enforce what?" and still further startles us with this answer to its own question:

To enforce the prohibition. To adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited State laws and State acts, and thus to render them effectually null, void, and innocuous. This is the legislative power of Congress, and this is the whole of it.

And this is the enforcement of the amendment and the equal protection of the law! The citizen suffers, the State sleeps. This is not a denial, and Congress can not act. The inert State securely holds in its slumbering embrace one of the definite powers of Congress. And this is constitutional law!

But the amendment says: "No State shall * * * deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." What constitutes a denial? There is an old maxim which says: "Whatever the sovereign permits he commands." And our standard lexicographers tell us that to "refuse to grant" is to deny; that "to withhold" is to deny; that "not to afford" is to deny; that "not to comply" is to deny. Therefore, if a State permits, it commands; if it refuses to grant the equal protection of the laws it denies the same; or if it withholds that equal protection, or neglects to afford it, or omits to comply with the purpose of the amendment to the Constitution, it denies the equal protection of the laws. Hence non-action is a denial. Permitting things to be done in violation of a duty or obligation is a denial of both. A failure to enact laws for the equal protection of citizens is a denial of such protection. A neglect to enforce laws enacted to assure such equal protection is a denial of it. Toleration of a custom or practice which asserts inequality in the enjoyment of the common rights of citizenship is a denial of equal protection. The extremest oppression may result from inaction. The power of Congress to enforce the provisions of the fourteenth article of the Constitution may be forever held in abeyance by the non-action of the States if the doctrine of the civil-rights cases is to remain the law of the land, notwithstanding the most flagrant violation of the rights of citizens may be a constant practice and a perpetual progress.

In the case of Prigg vs. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania (16 Peters, 539), the Supreme Court construed the last clause of section 2, article 4, of the Constitution, which reads:

No person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due.

It was contended in that case that inasmuch as there was no delegation of power to Congress to legislate for the enforcement of this provision of the Constitution it was simply an obligation imposed on the States, and that, consequently, the act of February 12, 1793, providing for the extradition of fugitive slaves, was unconstitutional.

How did the court meet this question? By resorting to principles of interpretation which, if applied to the civil-rights cases, would have maintained the constitutionality of the act under which they originated. The court then said:

How, then, are we to interpret the language of the clause? The true answer is, in such a manner, as, consistently with the words, shall fully and completely effectuate the whole objects of it. If by one mode of interpretation the right must become shadowy and unsubstantial and without any remedial power adequate to the end, and by another mode it will attain its just end and secure its manifest purpose, it would seem upon principles of reasoning absolutely irresistible that the latter ought to prevail. No court of justice can be authorized so to construe any clause of the Constitution as to defeat its obvious ends, when another construction, equally accordant with the words and sense thereof, will enforce and protect them.

And so the court held the law of Pennsylvania unconstitutional, and the fugitive slave law valid, not because of any special grant of power to Congress, but on the ground of an implication springing from the eighteenth clause of section 1, article 1, of the Constitution. That clause, familiar to all, gives to Congress the power—

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or any Department or officer thereof.

It may be somewhat difficult to see just how an implied power arises from this clause of the Constitution authorizing Congress to enact definite legislation for the enforcement of the provision relative to fugitives from service and labor. But when we grasp the reasonableness of the rule of interpretation adopted by the court and consider the strength of the pro-slavery sentiment which prevailed in the country at that time the result is not one to excite wonder. The surprise is that the same rule of interpretation, supplemented with the very general expressions of acceptance of the doctrine of the equality of all citizens now professed by political parties and the country generally, did not lead the court to a like conclusion in the civil-rights cases. But still greater is the surprise when we consider that the civil-rights act was supported by an express grant of power to Congress. And the crowning surprise is, that the court held the power of Congress in the former case to be exclusive, although based on an implied power, while in the latter it was held not to exist at all, notwithstanding the express grant which evidences it. It does not seem right that a rule which supported the monstrous oppression of human slavery shall be set aside the moment in which it could render effective service in protecting the equal rights of citizens, and especially is this to be regretted in view of the fact that protection is the supreme duty of government.

This is not progress but retrogression. It is a denial of the old and familiar saying that "revolutions never go backward." And this, in my judgment, is most unfortunate, inasmuch as it obstructs the gradual movement of our people towards such a universal recognition of the equal rights of all citizens as would soon have resulted in perfect contentment of all classes in this regard. If we must have departures from long-recognized and reasonable rules of interpretation of the Constitution, it would seem better for them to be in the direction of true progress and a more enlightened jurisprudence than the reverse. And it is difficult for me to realize, in view of the momentous events that have transpired in the country, the earnest endeavors that have been made to define citizenship and to establish powers for its protection, that no practical progress has been made. Indeed, I can not surrender the views I have long held relative to the true character of our Government and expressed by me in the debate on the civil-rights bill in the Thirty-ninth Congress, and which bear repetition here, in these words:

> Before our Constitution was formed the great fundamental rights which I have mentioned belonged to every person who became a member of our national family. No one surrendered a jot or tittle of these rights by consenting to the formation of a government. The entire machinery of government, as organized by the Constitution, was designed, among other things, to secure a more perfect enjoyment of these rights. A legislative department was created that laws necessary and proper to this end might be enacted. A judicial department was established to expound and administer the laws. An executive department was formed for the purpose of seeing to the execution of these laws. And these several departments of Government possessed the power to enact, administer, and enforce the laws "necessary and proper" to secure these rights, which existed anterior to the ordination of the Constitution. Any other view of the powers of this Government dwarfs it and renders it a failure in its most important office.
> Upon this broad principle I rest my justification of this bill. I assert that we have the power to do those things which governments are organized to do; that we may protect a citizen of the United States against a violation of his rights by the law of a single State; that by our laws and our courts we may intervene to maintain the proud character of American citizenship; that this power permeates our whole system and is a part of it, without which the States may run riot over every fundamental right belonging to citizens of the United States; that the right to exercise this power depends upon no express delegation, but runs with the right it is designed to protect; that we possess the same latitude in relation to the selection of means through which to exercise this power that belongs to us when a power rests upon express delegation; and that the decisions which support the latter maintain the former.

My views thus expressed have not changed. They are not in harmony with the doctrine of the court in the civil-rights cases. This is a practical difficulty. No matter how long and well I may argue against it, it will remain. We may not hope to change the views of the court relative to the Constitution and laws as they now stand. What can we do? Meet the difficulty by an opposing fact. This is practicable. We may further amend the Constitution, and so define the power of Congress that no doubt can arise respecting it. To this end I have proposed an amendment in form as follows, namely:

ARTICLE XVI.

> Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to protect citizens of the United States in the exercise and enjoyment of their rights, privileges, and immunities, and to assure to them the equal protection of the laws.

I do not claim perfection for this formula. It proposes a definite grant of affirmative power. It seems to me the only way to practically meet and completely overcome the position assumed by the Supreme Court in the civil-rights cases. For while it seems to me that the court is wrong, I do not expect it to correct itself in this regard.

If it should be claimed that the form proposed would confer on Congress exclusive legislative power over the subject-matter of the article, I have to say that any proper amendment of the phraseology will meet my ready acquiescence. My purpose is not to eliminate concurrent action, but to put the power of Congress in this regard beyond dispute, and to do this without any reference to class or race. It is better, in my judgment, in whatsoever we may do in the matter of the organization and exercise of the power to protect citizens of the United States in the equal enjoyment of their rights, that we proceed without reference to the distinctions of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. There is but one citizenship of the United States, and when we protect it we protect all. Nativity and naturalization determine who are citizens, and there are no lights and shades of race, color, or previous condition of servitude to be considered in the case. And in this respect I quite agree with an expression in the opinion of the Supreme Court in the civil-rights cases, couched in this language:

> When a man has emerged from slavery, and by aid of beneficent legislation has shaken off the inseparable concomitants of that state, there must be some stage in the progress of his elevation when he takes the rank of a mere citizen and ceases to be the special favorite of the laws; and when his rights as a citizen or a man are to be protected in the ordinary modes by which other men's rights are protected.

Nothing can be truer and wiser than this expression of the court as to what ought to be the conditions attendant on citizenship in this country. To this end should tend such changes as we may make in the Constitution and laws. This is the security for the future which we should constantly have in mind. For it is well to remember that about one-seventh of our population belongs to the colored race; and a conservative regard for the future peace of this nation should prompt us to make sure that so great a proportion of our population shall have no just ground on which to plant organized discontent. Owing to causes well understood by all, this vast mass of citizens have frequent cause of complaint and great obstacles to overcome in their movements toward an assured status in regard to the equal enjoyment of civil and political rights. Prudent statesmanship forbids a disregard of these conditions. The perplexities and dangers which attend other governments because of just grounds of discontent affecting considerable sections of their populations should warn us that it is never safe to allow, and much less to practice, injustice. Hence we should take care that our action be such as will bring all of our citizens to that condition of equality and protection which will cause them to feel that they are surely coming into the position described by the Supreme Court in the language I have quoted from its opinion in the civil-rights cases.

The ballot is a prodigious force in this country. The discontented portions of the populations of other countries are not armed with this weapon as they are in ours. The census of 1880 discloses that the colored race in the United States possesses 1,487,344 ballots, or more than one-sixth of the whole number. In some of the States they constitute a majority. The most masterful office of the ballot appears when it is used for the common good and the general welfare. The color line should not appear in the use of the ballot. But it will if it shows itself in the treatment which the colored race experience in this country. The ballot is the citizen's weapon of defense, as well as an instrumentality through which he may care for the concerns of the State and nation. It is natural that he should consider the former its primary use; for in this aspect of the case, however much he may resist it, the element of self-defense presses upon and directs his action. It is not difficult to appreciate the danger to the security, peace, and best interests of the country which lies in the possible concentration of more than one-sixth of the voters in an organization based on just grounds of discontent; and it should not be difficult to see that a very high duty demands that so calamitous a result be avoided by such governmental action, as will, by equal protection, establish contentment and "insure domestic tranquillity."

It would be a blessing to this nation if the common interests of men in government should determine the political associations of the colored voters of this country rather than the distinctive interests of race, induced by inequalities in the enjoyment of civil and political rights and privileges which too generally prevail. To effect this blessing was one of the chief offices of the fourteenth article of the Constitution and of the civil-rights legislation based thereon. The latter has disappeared through judicial action. But if courts do not rightly grasp the purposes of a great people, or become forgetful of the standard definitions of words in common use in our own language, or become oblivious to a state of facts existing in many sections of the country, which by mere toleration acquire the full force of absolute denial of the equal protection of the laws, or conclude that because a citizen may bring a suit at his own expense in a State court for the recovery of damages the full measure of the Government's duty is discharged and protection, ample and complete, assured, it will not be well for us to accept these errors as proper rules of action and surrender our concern for the future tranquillity of the nation.

We will, doubtless, all agree that after all has been done that can be done by constitutions and laws there will remain much for the individual citizen to do. We can not enact thrift. This must be worked out by the individual. We can not by law establish social position. This must be won by a development of those admirable personal qualities which inspire the respect of our fellow-citizens. We can not ordain success. This must come through application, persistence, and judgment. The most that constitutions and laws can do is to assure to each citizen an equal chance with all others to reach those ends which governments are organized to promote. But no citizen has an equal chance who has not equal protection. It is his right to possess both. It is the duty of government to assure both. When this is done the obligations of allegiance and protection concur, and we realize a solution of the problem over which philosophers and statesmen have expended so much discussion, and formulated in the question, "Which is the best government?" When the two obligations named move in the lines of harmony which convert true theories into current action and consequent just results, then we realize the best government. Then allegiance is hearty and protection is sure. This is more than glory to a state. It is justice. And this will preserve a "perfect union," * * * "insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity." It was in order to assure these things that our Constitution was ordained and our Government established. Justice is the foundation of the entire structure. If it be not present in all of our laws, and be not observed in our executive and judicial administrations, we can not move in those ways of national order and peace which evidence the contentment of a people. And it must be an omnipresent justice. Wherever the citizen is, there it must be. It must go hand in hand with the rights of all. It must know no class nor race, nor distinctions of position or rank, nor favors to riches, nor oppressions to poverty. It must be the defense of each citizen and the protector of all. Then shall we have the conditions requisite to stability. Then shall we possess and enjoy the best government.

I now move, sir, that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I am not disposed to enter into any discussion of the resolution proper offered by the Senator from Iowa, either as to the power of Congress to adopt such a resolution or as to the policy of adopting it. It opens up a very large field of inquiry on both propositions, and for one I am willing to enter upon it at the proper time. There is one thing, though, that I wish to call to the attention of the Senate in connection with this matter, and at the same time to the attention of the country.

On account of the decision recently rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States in reference to this general matter some propositions have been introduced into the Senate and possibly elsewhere looking to a remedying of the defects or troubles pointed out by the Supreme Court in its decision. It seems that in certain quarters some surprise is manifested at the decision rendered by the Supreme Court; that some person has been taken by surprise and has been disappointed. Now, my purpose is in a very few words to lay before the Senate succinctly a statement of this matter, so that it shall appear to the country that any one who had kept up with the current decisions of the Supreme Court on this and kindred questions could not possibly have been in the least disappointed in the result of the cases recently decided.

I will not refer to what took place here in debate upon the civil-rights bill when it was passed. I will skip that, and skip various prophecies made by various distinguished gentlemen at that time in reference to the fate of the measure. But when the case of The United States vs. Reese, coming from the State of Kentucky, reported in the ninety-second volume of United States Reports, was decided, certainly no one in the country, no lawyer at any rate, could have doubted for one moment, unless he was overtaken by a nightmare, what would be the result on the general proposition whenever the Supreme Court should get at it. Hardly had the court time to breathe before the case of Cruikshank, reported in the same volume, came before it from Louisiana, and everybody said then there was a farewell, so far as this bill was concerned, whenever it could be fairly and squarely presented to the Supreme Court of the United States.

There the matter seemed to have slept. No cases came into the court involving the question until we reach the one-hundredth volume of United States Reports, and then they came in a perfect sluice. The State of Virginia ex parte; The State of Virginia against Rives; the case of Strauder vs. West Virginia—three cases reported in the one-hundredth volume of United States Reports. The Supreme Court, with very few dissenting opinions, almost unanimously decided that it was State action, State laws, State something, that the fourteenth amendment was leveled at, and there they stood. Next came the most interesting case of them all, Neal vs. The State of Delaware, reported in the one hundred and third volume United States Reports, and that opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan, to which I shall refer somewhat at length after a while, in which, quoting the opinion of Judge Strong in the Strauder vs. West Virginia case, it was held that the action of this amendment was upon State legislation, State action, State agents, and not upon individuals. Every person supposed there was an end of it. Then came the case of Bush vs. The State of Kentucky, in the one hundred and seventh volume, and the Supreme Court repeated what it had said in the several cases to which I have referred.

Now come the cases with the decision of which the Senator from Iowa finds fault, not yet reported, but to be in the one hundred and eighth volume, only a little more elongated, a little more extended, so to speak, but a repetition of what was decided in Reese vs. The United States; and so on from the ninety-second volume.

This is a statement of the whole matter before the Supreme Court. Then where is the ground of surprise? Would not the country have been disappointed if the decision had been otherwise? I will tell the Senate where the ground of disappointment is. Judge Harlan, in delivering his dissenting opinion, comments extensively, and states as the groundwork of his decision the celebrated case of Prigg vs. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in 16 Peters, referred to by the Senator from Iowa; but, unfortunately, we have the language of Judge Harlan in the very interesting case of Neal vs. Delaware, reported in 103 United States Reports. On page 397 of that volume he uses this language:

> The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are executed, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The Supreme Court has said no more in its last decision than is said here by Mr. Justice Harlan.

> Whoever, by virtue of public position under a State government, deprives another of property, life, or liberty without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name and for the State, and is clothed with the State's authority, his act is that of the State. This must be, or the constitutional prohibition has no meaning.

So said his eight brethren when they delivered the opinion in the cases upon which the Senator from Iowa now makes his attack.

Now I ask the Senate and the country where is the disappointment, where is the surprise, where is the consistency, or where is the inconsistency? The inconsistency is in the opinion of the minority, delivered by that eminent jurist from Kentucky Justice Harlan, and it is not in the opinion of the majority.

Mr. President, I deemed it my duty to say this much, having watched this somewhat and knowing somewhat of the workings of these laws and having seen them practically. I have watched the laws with some considerable interest and kept up, as I think, with the current of the decisions upon them. I have heard some of these cases argued even as far back as the Blyew case, and no human being ever made a greater argument than Judge Black in the case of Blyew vs. United States, which came from Kentucky, and is reported in 13 Wallace's Reports, 581. From that down I have watched this question closely, and I say the country ought not to be surprised, it ought not to be shocked, and I do not think it was; the shock would have been if the decision had been the other way.

Frankly and candidly, if white, black, or any other complexion of people in this country have not the equal protection of the laws I want to give it to them; I have never attempted to withhold it, and never shall from any of them; but how far we can go in and throttle the States under the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa I am not now prepared to say. Whether as a matter of policy or principle it should pass I am not now prepared to say, but I hope to be heard when the question comes up properly. I should not have said this much except to put these suggestions on record in the order in which they are and as they have been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 13, 1883.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks in respect of the appointment of the Committee on Printing yesterday made by the Chair the Journal ought to show the explanation that the Chair made, so as not to raise any precedent respecting the privileges of the two Houses being controlled by an act of Congress. If there be no objection the Secretary will amend the Journal by inserting in connection with that appointment the explanation made by the Chair. The Chair hears no objection, and the Journal will be amended accordingly. So amended, if there be no objection, the Journal of yesterday's proceedings will stand approved.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from W. W. Corcoran, chairman of the Joint Commission for the Completion of the Washington Monument created by the act of August 2, 1876, transmitting a report in regard to the progress of the work on the Washington Monument during the past year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This letter, together with the accompanying report and drawing, which, in a letter to the Chair, Mr. Corcoran asks may be included in the printing, if there be no objection, will be printed for the use of the Senate, and the communication, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Belinda Woodward, of Winchester, Ill., praying that an increase of pension be granted to the widows of deceased soldiers and sailors; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of F. M. Ryon, postmaster at Streator, Ill., praying to be reimbursed for certain expenditures made by him on account of the postal service; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented the petition of Josiah Shinkle, of Covington, Ky., praying compensation for salvage services; also the petition of Josiah Shinkle, praying compensation for rescuing the steamboat Echo; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN. I present the petition of Alexander K. Shepard, of Alabama, who represents that in 1865 the Government of the United States captured from the confederate states a large amount of iron, heavy ordnance, and other débris of the naval foundery at Selma, Ala., and that the President of the United States ordered General Swayne to sell the property. General Swayne sold it to Mr. Shepard for the sum of seventeen thousand and odd dollars and delivered it, and afterward Mr. Shepard sold it to some gentlemen in New York and received a part of the money. Afterward the district attorney for the middle district of Alabama instituted, in the name of the Government of the United States, libel proceedings for the confiscation of this as captured and abandoned property, and contrary to the protests of Mr. Shepard proceeded in that court to obtain a judgment. The marshal was required to seize the property, which he did, and also to take the money which Mr. Shepard had received in part payment from citizens of New York on account of the sale which he had made. The money paid by Mr. Shepard was reported to the Treasurer of the United States, was covered into the Treasury, and has remained there from that day to this. Mr. Shepard presents his petition, asking that the money may be refunded to him by the Government of the United States. Inasmuch as the question is one of jurisdiction between the power of the President in ordering the sale and the power of the district court in ordering the subsequent confiscation, I believe that the petition ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary. I will ask that reference unless objection is made. I expect to accompany the petition with a bill, which I shall introduce when the proper order is called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred, if there be no objection, to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is so referred.

Mr. BROWN. I present the petition of a large number of the leading merchants and business men of the city of Savannah, Ga., praying for an early appropriation to continue the improvements on the harbor of Savannah. The engineers reported something over a year ago that $730,000 would be necessary to deepen the channel to 19 feet in the river and over the bar. Two hundred thousand dollars was appropriated for that purpose, and on account of the failure of the river and harbor bill at the last session of Congress the work is virtually stopped, and because of the filling with sand and other obstructions a great deal of what has already been done is being lost. It is very important, therefore, that there should be an appropriation made as early as possible for the purpose of continuing the work. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and at the proper time I shall accompany it with a bill providing an appropriation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of A. F. Baugh, administrator of the estate of Ashton Butterworth, late a citizen of Franklin County, Tennessee, praying compensation for loss of a cotton manufactory and machinery and damage to the same and consumption of cotton and other material by the Army of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented letters of certain judges of United States circuit and district courts in relation to the employment of stenographers for such courts; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the petition of V. D. Adkins and 50 others, soldiers of the late war for the Union, citizens of Indiana, praying that 160 acres of land be granted to each officer, soldier, and sailor of that war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TEXAS AND PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Chair will lay before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by he Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], calling on the Secretary of the Interior for copies of papers relating to the attempted transfer by the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Railroad of a certain land grant. The resolution will be read.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. VAN WYCK was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to furnish to the Senate copies of all papers on file in his Department relating to the attempted transfer by the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company of its land grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad Companies of Arizona, New Mexico, and California; also, copies of any memorials, briefs, or letters relating to the matter of land grants or subsidies to said Texas and Pacific Railroad.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXPENDITURES OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information relating to the expenses incurred by the Department of Justice. The resolution will be reported.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. VAN WYCK was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish to the Senate copies of vouchers and items audited by the First Auditor of the Treasury on account of expenses incurred by the Department of Justice since March 4, 1881, with the names of special or assistant attorneys and the names of detectives; excepting the vouchers and items relating to and the names of special attorneys from January 1, 1882, to March 1, 1883, that information having been furnished and printed by order of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CLERKS FOR SENATORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate, offered on a previous day by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], a resolution entitling each Senator, not chairman of a committee, to a clerk. This resolution, the Chair sees by its indorsement, was ordered to lie on the table, so that it is not to be presented to the Senate under the rule as a resolution offered on a former day. It will only come up on the motion of some Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. I made the request the other day that the resolution lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That takes it from the Calendar of daily resolutions, and it will come up on motion.

Mr. BUTLER. So I understand.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], on the 10th instant, relative to the perpetuation of the public debt.

Mr. VOORHEES. It was not my purpose to ask for immediate action upon that resolution. My object was to let it lie on the table subject to my own call. On a future occasion I may desire to call it up and submit some remarks upon it. If, however, the Senate desires to vote upon it I certainly have no objection to that course being taken. My object was not, however, to precipitate immediate action upon the questions involved in the resolution, and I ask that it may go over until after the holidays, if I am permitted to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will move to lay it on the table, and that motion shall be agreed to, it will then be subject to his motion at any time.

Mr. VOORHEES. I thought I had done so when the resolution was submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not so appear on the indorsement.

Mr. VOORHEES. I then move to lay it on the table, subject to call hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Anything laid on the table is always subject to call.

Mr. VOORHEES. It was my purpose to make the motion at the time the resolution was offered. I perhaps only made the suggestion at the time without making a formal motion. I make that motion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the resolution lie on the table for the time being.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar of Resolutions is exhausted. The Calendar of General Orders is now in order. The first bill on the Calendar will be reported.

The bill (S. 19) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator who reported that bill does not seem to be in his seat.

Mr. FRYE. I gave notice that to-day I should ask to call up the report of the Committee on Rules touching the revision of the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was in error in laying before the Senate bill No. 19. The first thing that should be on the Calendar of General Orders is the report of the Committee on Rules, which will now be laid before the Senate. It will be read.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to facilitate the consideration of the long series of rules proposed, I suggest that the same plan be adopted as is usual on appropriation bills; which is, that the first formal reading of the rules be waived, and that they be taken up by clauses, subject to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the reading in extenso of the report of the Committee on Rules be dispensed with, and that the respective paragraphs be acted upon in order as they are read. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The first proposed rule will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read as follows:

RULE I.

APPOINTMENT OF A SENATOR TO THE CHAIR.

1. In the absence of the Vice-President, the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore.

2. In the absence of the Vice-President, and pending the election of a President pro tempore, the Secretary of the Senate or in his absence the Chief Clerk shall perform the duties of the Chair.

3. The President pro tempore shall have the right to name in open Senate, or, if absent, in writing, a Senator to perform the duties of the Chair; and the Senator so designated may discharge such duties for a period not exceeding three days, unless the Senate shall otherwise order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The question is on the adoption of this proposed rule.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, there are certain results to follow from that rule which I hope the Senate will consider before they concur in the recommendation of the committee. As the rule now stands, the President pro tempore of the Senate can be removed at any time by a vote of the Senate; he can not designate his successor except as a mere locum tenens, and then not beyond the adjournment of the Senate; so that if the President pro tempore of the Senate should not present himself at the next meeting of the Senate after an adjournment there would be a vacancy, and the Secretary or the Acting Secretary would have to preside until, as the first business, a President of the Senate was chosen by vote.

This has its inconveniences, undoubtedly, and those inconveniences have been emphasized by the close balance in numbers of the political parties in this Chamber. There has been almost a tie, a dead-lock, in this Chamber between parties for many years past; the absence or the balance of one vote or two, or three at the utmost, would change the choice of the Presiding Officer and the political party to which he was attached.

Under the present law something much more important than who shall put the questions and decide them in this Chamber attaches itself to the tenure of the powers and duties of the presidency of this body. The law relating to the devolution of the powers of the Presidential office, as it now stands, casts them upon the President pro tempore of the Senate in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability to serve of both the President and the Vice-President. I think the Senate should contemplate the existing law while they are making a rule which must be affected by it.

I regret the condition of the law. I believe the action of the Senate at the last session was a wise one, and was imperatively demanded by the needs of the country in providing for a succession to the performance of the functions of the Chief Magistracy of this country so that under scarcely any possible or supposable contingency could there be an interregnum and an absence of a functionary lawfully entitled to exercise the duties of this great and essential office. But as we stand now, Senators, I will ask you to contemplate the effect of the rule as proposed by the committee. It provides that—

The President pro tempore shall have the right to name in open Senate, or, if absent, in writing, a Senator to perform the duties of the Chair; and the Senator so designated may discharge such duties for a period not exceeding three days, unless the Senate shall otherwise order.

We will suppose that our honored friend who is to-day the President pro tempore of the Senate shall absent himself for three days, and during that period of time, by the act of God or a public enemy, the President of the United States shall be removed from life, who under this construction and under this rule would then become the acting President of the United States? I will not stop to chop logic—for it would be no more than that—as to whether the exercise of the functions or the possession of the office itself shall follow under our law. Suffice it to say, that the man who under law will exercise the functions of the Chief Magistracy of this country will be in substance the President of the United States.

With the difficulties already clustering around the unfortunate state of law under which we live, does the Senate propose to add to those difficulties the power in the President pro tempore of the Senate, unchecked, uncontrolled by the vote or the approval of the Senate, to nominate at his own will the man who shall possess the enormous, the important, the incalculable powers for good or evil which may attend the temporary possession of the functions of the Chief Magistracy of this country? It seems to me entirely in opposition to the theory of our Government. It seems to me a very dangerous assumption. It seems to me that this proposed rule is fraught in its possibilities with very grave dangers; for this is not only a government of law, but it is a government of public opinion as well as law; and we must not simply so govern that law shall have its own power to be obeyed per se, but that it shall not be, so far as we can prevent it, in violation of, in opposition to, or defeat of the settled, well-considered feeling and sentiment of our fellow-countrymen.

I need not here repeat the many difficulties that the present law entails, the grave and difficult questions, fraught with trouble, of the present act of Congress, to which I have referred, the act of 1792, devolving the powers of the Presidency temporarily upon the Presiding Officer of this body—whether he is to remain a Senator with his legislative power, and annexed to that the great executive power, coming here to vote upon measures and retiring to the other end of the Avenue to veto those which he was unable once to overcome by his vote or by his argument in debate; or whether a man who passes into the possession of the Presidential powers as a Senator shall use those powers, after he has assumed them under the law, after the expiration of the term for which he was elected. All these are questions of which I do not care to discuss the results, but simply to suggest, as showing how it is filled with confusion and difficulty, how illogical, how contrary it is to the whole framework and genius of our system of checks and balances upon power, the check upon the executive by the legislative, the check upon the legislative by the executive, and upon both by the judicial, and how they are confused by this proposition to cast executive power upon a member of the legislative branch.

That is the law as it stands now. We have sought in this body to amend it. It was the failure of the House of Representatives in the last Congress to concur in the proposition we made or to make any proposition of their own that would remedy the existing danger. But will not, I submit, the proposed rule carry you far beyond that? Does it not superadd difficulties and questions which may well cause us to hesitate before we accede to it?

As we now stand, if the present President of the United States or the acting President of the United States, whichever you may call him, but the individual and the official who exercises unquestionably the functions and powers of that great office, were to be removed by death, certainly the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] would under the present law assume the functions of the Presidency. That is our present condition of affairs, and what would be the effect of this rule? This body by a lawful majority has elected the Senator from Vermont to that office, those who voted for him knowing that there was a contingency of human affairs that might throw upon his shoulders and upon his conscience the great duties of the Chief-Magistracy of this country. Certainly his personal character had its weight, and its just weight, with those who selected him not simply to decide questions of order and to put questions in this body, but as the possible incumbent, the possible possessor of the great mass of powers to which I have referred which attach to the Chief-Magistracy. That is the result as the law now stands. I need not repeat suggestions of the defects of that law, of the results of that law, of the confusion that would follow in case our friend from Vermont was called upon, being a Senator and a member of the legislative branch, to assume executive functions without losing his right and his legislative power, for the State of Vermont can not be deprived of the services of either of her Senators on this floor without her own consent.

Now, what does this rule propose? That you shall go further, and you shall give to the Senator from Vermont the right for three days to designate the President pro tempore of this body. He can not designate him conditionally; the person designated must either be the President of this body or this body has no presiding officer. He can not be a locum tenens. If he be not lawfully chosen and designated in the fullest meaning of the term "the President of the Senate," then in the case of the death of the present President the devolution of the powers of his office would be upon the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

But if you shall by this rule give to the President of the Senate pro tempore the right again for a limited period of three days or of three weeks—for it is a mere question of degree and discretion as to time—the right to designate the person who shall fill that place, it seems to me you necessarily have given to one man the judging of the individual who in the providence of God may be made the possessor of the powers and functions of the Presidential office. Is the Senate prepared for that? I am not, and I will say further, that while I am perfectly aware that argument can be made upon this frame of words, and I know scarcely of any frame of words on which arguments can not be made, I do not think we have a right to adopt a rule that contains by possibility the question which I have suggested as to the right of any one man, for any time at all, to nominate the functionary who in a contingency under the law, without any control of the Senate, may become the President of the United States or possess the powers of that office even for the interval that may occur between the time when this anticipated difficulty may arise and the new election provided for in a very obscure and tangled fashion under the present statutes.

Now it may be said that at this time in the absence from the Chair of our friend from Vermont and the presence in it of the present Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], if there came eo instanti the news of the death of the President of the United States, his designation would control, and the mere corporal presence of the Senator from Kansas by the nomination or by the action of the Senator from Vermont would make him the person to execute the duties of the Presidential office. I should answer that by reference to the old maxim de minimis non curat; the law does not mark the fractions of a day, and the legislative day having begun, it will continue until an adjournment takes place, and the person who was at the commencement of that day the presiding officer of this body would be at the close and during all of that day held by every rule of judicial determination to be the person who on that day and all of that day continued to be President pro tempore, unless the records of the body should show that there had been affirmatively a change in the presidency of the body during that legislative day. But suppose there should be a capability of question being made of the fact, ought you to add to the possibility and the number of such questions? I submit respectfully it is not wise. When we shall have changed the order of succession, in the event of death, resignation, inability, and the like, to the powers of the Presidential office, I shall have no objection to so reasonable a rule as this.

I do not propose to tie our President pro tempore against his convenience to the moment and the spot of 12 o'clock of the day and that desk; that no consideration of private care or of private convenience, sickness or health, or the like shall be considered, and that he must, dead or alive almost, be here. I know it is an inconvenient thing. It would be simply, as we know, to-day a matter of form, that if the election took place and occupied three minutes by the watch, the will of the Senate and of the majority of the Senate would be accepted. There is no disposition—I am satisfied every Senator of the body is aware of that fact—to question in the slightest degree the effect and power of the numerical majority, small though it may be, in this Chamber on the other side, no disposition to take small, temporary, petty, or what would seem to be a disreputable advantage on account of the absence of members.

Sir, I hope the Senate will pause before they will agree that a President pro tempore of this body for three days' time, who may in the accidents of life and death become the possessor of the powers of the Presidential office, shall become so upon the unchecked, uncontrolled nomination of a single man.

I will not say that arguments may not be made, respectable and weighty, against what I have suggested. I will not say that the weight of reasoning may not be shown in such a way as would render these unpremeditated suggestions of mine of less force than I think they are, but I mean to say this: that on matters of this kind we ought to act, if we can, so as to have no question. The thing is too serious to allow us to take steps which are open to doubt and to question. Let us amend our law, and destroy this dangerous condition of things that devolve executive power upon a member of a branch of the Legislature whose own term and whose powers are prescribed and limited, as are all others; but let us not add increased difficulty and increased question to our present status. Let us amend the law. Pass again—I hope to see it done unless some wiser measure can be provided—the act that met the assent of the Senate at the last session, creating a line of succession that could not reasonably fail, and that was supposed to be in harmony with the wisest of the public expression at the last Presidential election.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me a question before he sits down?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. LAPHAM. I should like to suggest whether appointing a person to perform the duties of the Chair in any way clothes him with any other power than simply that; whether the President pro tempore of the Senate does not retain his office and the succession to the Presidential office if that contingency should arise?

Mr. BAYARD. These questions have been raised here before and they have not been satisfactorily disposed of. I remember very well that many years ago a distinguished member of this body, the late Senator Morton of Indiana, brought up a question as to the powers of the President pro tempore—the Vice-President of the United States was then deceased and we had a President pro tempore of the body—and I asked him, as to the power of the Senate after they had once chosen a President pro tempore and then by death the functions of the Presidential office devolved pro tempore upon that President, whether then the Senate could claim the power to remove and change their President pro tempore in order to remove and change ipso facto the President of the United States; and from that Senator I could get no reply. He told me that question he was not prepared to decide and would not.

I merely suggest this to show how dangerous it is to deal with a subject so open to question and so difficult of decision, in regard to which men's minds naturally and honestly disagree, even in a time of quiescence and when there is no heat of party passion or of party bias to pervert their judgments.

Mr. GARLAND. What is the pending question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The first proposed rule in the report of the Committee on Rules has been read by the Secretary and is now before the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. GARLAND. Then I wish to offer an amendment to the proposed rule of the committee. In clause 3 of the first rule as proposed by the committee after the word "chair" in the second line I move to strike out all that follows, and insert:

But such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator had better prepare his amendment and submit it to the Secretary so that it may be read at the table.

Mr. GARLAND. I can announce it. I move to strike out all after the word "chair" in the second line of the third clause, and to insert: "But such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "chair" in line 2 of clause 3 it is moved to strike out "and the Senator so designated may discharge such duties for a period not exceeding three days, unless the Senate shall otherwise order," and insert:

But such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, this is not a new proposition before the Senate by any means. It has been discussed three or four times during the short period I have been a member of the Senate and a good many times before. There is a very serious difficulty in the matter, and one that I do not know can be obviated at all. The third section of article 1 of the Constitution provides that in the absence of the Vice-President a President pro tempore may be elected by the Senate, and there it stops. It does not say how long the President pro tempore shall occupy the chair, or whether the Senate shall proceed every five minutes, or every ten minutes, or every twenty minutes, or at any longer or shorter period to the election of a President pro tempore. But subsequently, some time in 1876 I think, the Senate passed a resolution that the President pro tempore of the Senate held his position at the will of the Senate, and I believe that has been acquiesced in as being a correct and proper solution of that proposition. But, strange to say, there is no such power to be found in the Vice-President by the rules as this rule, and not only this rule but the kindred rules on this subject pretend to give or offer to give to the President pro tempore. The Committee on Rules have very carefully arranged this matter in a kind of historical schedule, so that we find that as far back as January 3, 1820, the rule read thus:

The Vice-President, or President of the Senate pro tempore, shall have the right to name a member to perform the duties of the Chair; but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment.

That was the old rule, and it continued down, as is shown in the next column of the form reported by the Committee on Rules, until the present rule was substituted in its place.

A long time since, when Jesse D. Bright was President pro tempore, and sought to designate a Senator from Michigan to take the chair under a proceeding of this kind, objection was interposed by Mr. Crittenden, who took the broad ground, and so argued, that there was no constitutional power for any such thing, and the reasons assigned in that debate are in the Congressional Globe before me, but I shall not trouble the Senate to read them. They show very clearly that no such power existed.

Coming down to a later day, when our honored and respected President pro tempore, the late Senator from Illinois, Judge David Davis, desired to visit his native State, Maryland, in June, 1882, he called the present incumbent [Mr. INGALLS] to the chair, who was met by this objection being interposed by some Senator; I do not now remember whom, but I think it was either the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] or the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and after a considerable debate and a large amount of skirmishing on the proposition we came to no solution of it, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] moved an adjournment, and that carried us over from Friday to the following Monday, when our President pro tempore was restored to us. That proceeding elicited a number of amendments to this rule, one offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], one by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Ferry], and an amendment to that by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], one by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and another by myself, all of which are reported in the second column on the left, at page 2 of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Now, Mr. President, I do not believe—and it must be admitted that it is an inconvenience—that the President pro tempore has the power to name a person to hold his position beyond that sitting of the Senate at which he is so named, and I think the old rule is better in that respect than the rule now proposed.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator how long that rule of 1820 was in force?

Mr. GARLAND. Until March 25, 1868, when another rule was substituted in its place. The Senate worked under that rule for forty-eight years. I believe the debate at the time to which I have alluded, when Mr. Bright was President pro tempore of the Senate, demonstrated that no such power as this existed.

In addition to that, let us turn to what is understood to be the common law of this proceeding in analogous cases; I read from section 313 of Cushing on the Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies:

On the death, resignation, disqualification, or removal of the presiding officer a new election takes place in the manner already described. But whenever, by reason of sickness or other cause, the presiding officer is prevented from attending to the duties of his office, and is not likely to be able to resume them for some time, it is usual in all our legislative assemblies to elect a presiding officer pro tempore, to preside until the former is again able to attend in his place, or ceases to hold the office of presiding officer. The duties and functions of this temporary officer, if elected in place of a presiding officer who is a member of the body over which he presides, are ordinarily the same with those of the permanent president, during his absence, and terminate with the return of the latter to the chair; but where the presiding officer is not a member of the body over which he presides the functions and duties of the temporary presiding officer may be otherwise regulated by law or by a rule of the assembly. In most of the legislative assemblies of this country it is also provided by a rule that the presiding officer, if a member, may substitute some other member to perform the duties of the chair in his place, if he have occasion to be absent for a part or the whole of the present sitting. But he is not obliged to announce the name of the substitute to the House; and, if the latter is in committee of the whole, the speaker may appoint some member to take the chair and preside when the committee rises. But such substitution ought to be made as an official act, and when the presiding officer is himself in the chair of the assembly, or present in it, and can not be made in his absence, by letter or otherwise.

This authority goes beyond even the position assumed by many gentlemen who oppose the rule proposed by the Senate Committee.

If the presiding officer is unable to attend, in person, at the commencement of the daily sitting of the assembly, his power of substitution no longer exists, and there is then occasion for the election of a temporary presiding officer.

It is very clear from the common law attaching to this proceeding, as we call it, that an election should take place every day; the choice should not pass longer than the sitting at which the temporary officer is chosen. I think it is safer to adhere to the spirit of the old rule and not to fix it so that he may hold for three days or longer simply at the discretion of one Senator. As a matter of course, as stated by the Senator from Delaware, if you can make it three days, you can make it three weeks or three months. The great difficulty in the case has grown out of that unfortunate act of 1792, which I always considered unconstitutional and which was virtually so declared in Blount's case, devolving the duties of the President in any contingency on the mere President pro tempore of this body. I think we had better adhere to the old rule, and that is the amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think it is quite obvious that in the present condition of the Senate, without a Vice-President, the proposed rule would be a matter of great convenience, almost of necessity, unless we are to change the presiding officer by a vote of the Senate from time to time, which has many inconveniences, because there is a kind of special practice needed which it requires time to get accustomed to in order to do the duties well for the benefit of the Senate. Therefore it would be a great convenience to adopt this rule if it can be done lawfully. I believe everybody will agree to that. Whether it can be done lawfully depends upon the question of whether the President pro tempore is the person who by designation occupies the chair under the rule or whether he is the person elected by the Senate under the Constitution. Now, I think it is clear under the Constitution and under the law that the person who is President pro tempore is an officer. He is described as an officer in the Constitution, and by the Constitution and by the law made in pursuance of it he is required to take an oath and subscribe it as such officer to perform the duties of that office, so long as he holds it, faithfully and well.

Now I think we must all agree that the person who, under the permission of the rule and by common parliamentary practice without any rule, is called to the chair by the President pro tempore, or by the Vice-President if he were sitting here, is not the President pro tempore of the Senate. The whole history of the country will show that, although we have had Presidents pro tempore of the Senate probably at every session of the Senate from the foundation of the Constitution to this day, no temporary occupant of the chair has ever signed an enrolled bill or joint resolution, which must be signed by the rules and really under the Constitution—although it does not name it in terms, but it is a necessary incident of it—by the official presiding officer of the body.

The temporary occupant of the chair, the designated Senator, I think I am safe in saying from some examination and from an observation of now almost eighteen years in this body, has never exercised any such function, and nobody ever thought that he could, and for the reason that the fact that he was called upon to occupy the chair did not clothe him with the office of President pro tempore. If it did not, then the person who has been elected President pro tempore and has taken the oath as required by the Constitution and the laws as precedent to his exercising any function of the office continues to be President pro tempore although out of the chair and wherever he may be within the United States I will say—I will not say how it would be otherwise—until the Senate chooses to elect his successor and have him properly qualified by taking the oath. I think that is the law; I think it is the common sense of the case.

If that be so, then the fact that the existing rule authorizes the President pro tempore to designate a Senator to perform the duties of the Chair—not the duties affixed by law to the office, but the parliamentary duty of keeping order and recognizing gentlemen who rise and all that sort of thing—does not become in any sense a disturber of the official character of the person who has been elected President pro tempore; and that being so, the President pro tempore would continue to hold that office just as much the next day as he did before; he would hold it the third day; and he holds it all the time, as the Senate has decided, and I believe without any serious difference of opinion, subject to the pleasure of the Senate to change him from day to day and from minute to minute except for the rule that a resolution must lie over, if anybody objects to it, one day. We could abolish that rule and we could have every Senator in this body lawfully and officially President pro tempore of it to-day, one after the other, if we sat long enough to go through the form of election and swearing in.

So then, it appears to me, with great deference to my friend from Delaware, that in point of constitutional law, a President pro tempore once elected and qualified will continue to be the President pro tempore until his successor is elected under the Constitution by the Senate to that office with all the responsibilities that belong to it by the Constitution and the laws and is qualified by taking the proper oath to perform the duties. If I am right about that, it would follow that this designation for three days—which I repeat would certainly be a great convenience to the Senate and to the person who must now (the Vice-President being absent) preside all the time, would not produce the difficulty or danger that my friend supposes; and I think that is especially true from the circumstance that every moment of time, subject to the rule as to resolution lying over, the whole matter is in the control of the Senate to elect a new President pro tempore at any moment they please. If, therefore, you were to grant the Senator who now has the honor to hold the office of President pro tempore——

Mr. BAYARD. Before my friend takes his seat I should like to ask whether the result of his statement of the case and of his argument would not be that there would be an officer presiding over the deliberations of this body unknown to the Constitution, not a President pro tempore, whom he describes as an official named in the Constitution whom the Senate can elect in case of the death or absence of the Vice-President—not that individual, but another who is to be I know not what. I would say, if I am to accept the suggestion of my friend from Vermont, a nondescript, not a President pro tempore, but something else, with a power to preside, to control the Senate, to decide its questions of order, and what other powers I know not, but it would depend on what he is to be called in law—some one not chosen by the Senate, for the Constitution prescribes that the presiding officer of this body shall be chosen by the Senate, and this rule provides that he may be nominated by a person who at first hand has been chosen. In other words, here is a delegation of delegated power, a thing generally forbidden by law. Therefore, it seems to me that when the Senator from Vermont, for instance, being President pro tempore, should designate for three days our friend from Kansas to occupy the place, he must be there in color of some office, and if he is not the presiding officer of the Senate, how will you describe him? What are his powers? What are his duties? What control has he? In case he suddenly dies, who succeeds? It seems to me that these are confusing questions and very confusing results arising from this delegation of a delegated power.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that were true (leaving the sentence that was unfinished when my friend from Delaware addressed me for a moment), then we are in exactly that condition at this moment of time; the Senator from Kansas occupying the chair is a nondescript; there is no term known to parliamentary law or the Constitution of the United States by which we can address the Senator from Kansas while he is sitting there, because he certainly has not been elected President pro tempore of the Senate. The Senate certainly has not ordered him except by a delegation to take the chair at all. They did, by a formal rule, which was precisely in conformity with the common law of all deliberative bodies and practically founded in necessary common sense in this world, delegate the power to the President pro tempore to designate a Senator to perform the duties of the chair for a limited time which the rule prescribes. That is a delegation of power, and it may be, as the Senator from Delaware says, the delegation of a power that is incapable of delegation by the delegate with whom the Senate has intrusted the power of presiding in general; and, therefore, we are nothing but a mob at this moment, and I could call my friend from Delaware all sorts of hard names, and the only way he could get redress would be that known among gentlemen and not known to the rules of the Senate. That will not do, Mr. President.

It is contrary, I say with great respect, to the pervading sense of the fitness of things that belongs to all jurisprudence and to all legislative history, as it seems to me; and if it be not correct at this moment, then it will be equally incorrect ten minutes hence; it would be equally incorrect to-morrow if you were to continue to sit in the chair until to-morrow, except that the rule limits the authority of a designated Senator to sit in the chair to the period of an adjournment. If it was constitutional to limit it to that period, why is it not constitutional to limit it to a period of another day or three months if the Senate says so, because I argree that the argument goes to that extent, or three years, the Senate all the time retaining the power, as it does under the rules and under the Constitution, to change its will and to put a new person in if the regular officer has abused the confidence of the Senate in not attending to its duties for too long a time. That is the redress for any abuse of that kind, if there should be one if the discretion were granted. The fact that the law takes in certain cases no note of divisions of a day clearly will not apply to such a case, because otherwise the election of a new President pro tempore could not go into effect until the day afterward because the law presumed that there were no fractions of a day, and the existing President pro tempore must therefore be presumed in law to be President pro tempore for the whole day. My friend saw the force of that, and suggested that that would appear in the Journal, in the record, as showing a division. Is there any constitutional objection to the Journal of the Senate showing (as it properly might, only it might make it voluminous) that you had taken the chair at a certain hour this morning at the invitation of the President pro tempore? Not the least. It is a part of the proceeding of this body under the rule that it has made; and the mere fact that the Journal does not show it (being a matter of no importance usually, and therefore a waste of space and time and printing to put it into the Journal) is the only difference between the two cases.

So I submit, with great respect to my friend from Delaware, that that argument will not hold water, and we come back again to these two simple propositions, that under the Constitution the President pro tempore of the Senate is an officer provided for by the Constitution, and when he has taken and subscribed the oath required by the Constitution and the laws he is invested with an office, and that office continues until the power that by the Constitution is authorized to change it does change it in the way that the Constitution and the laws require. That being the case, the question of whether the President pro tempore is present in or absent from the chair to-day or to-morrow or the next day is one depending entirely upon the pleasure and will of the Senate as a body, for the convenience of the transaction of their business. When we have a Vice-President, the ordinary presiding officer, of course there is no occasion for any extension of the rule that has so long stood in force, of one day's sitting by a designated Senator; but when you have not that state of affairs and have the state of affairs that now exists, unless the Senate desires to go through the inconvenience of changing its presiding officer very often, we can of course see that it would happen that any President pro tempore might at 12 o'clock on the morning when he was to call the Senate to order be suddenly ill, unable at that particular hour to get properly to the Senate Chamber, when to-morrow he would be quite able to come in and go on with his duties, and he might happen to be the man, and he would have been under former states of affairs, whom we should all delight to have occupy the chair.

Now, can it be that under the Constitution we are forced in such a case to proceed to the formality of electing a new President pro tempore, of having him take and subscribe the oath of office, of informing the President of the United States and the House of Representatives that we had elected a new presiding officer, and then the next day, when he returned, go through with the formality of making another election, re-electing him and giving the same notice over again? I am hardly able to understand that such can be the law. I feel confident myself with great respect that is not, and that there is no constitutional difficulty or legal difficulty in extending this period of one adjournment to two or three or any number of days that the Senate thinks that its own convenience will warrant.

As to the power under the present rule of the President pro tempore to designate by letter a person to take the chair, it certainly is open to question. Not because the Senate has not power to grant such authority, but because it is doubtful whether it has done it under the existing rule, although one of the finest lawyers that I ever knew and a leading member of the party that occupies the seats filled by gentlemen on the other side, Judge Thurman, held when he was President pro tempore, as did other such officers, that that authority did exist under the rule, and exercised it.

I believe there was some discussion about it; but of course that is an immaterial question that I need not take up your time about.

That is a conventional question which the rule may provide about one way or the other; but the main question it appears to me that my friend from Delaware on further consideration will agree that the Senate has power to deal with according to its own notions of its own convenience.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I see no serious practical difficulty in the case. When we have a Vice-President we are in the habit of choosing a President pro tempore. I see no objection to our choosing one now, choosing a presiding officer, one who will take the chair in the absence of the regular presiding officer of the Senate; or we might adopt a course like that followed by the House of Commons. There it is the rule that when the speaker shall be absent necessarily the chairman of the committee on ways and means, I believe, shall take the chair from day to day, the necessary absence of the proper speaker being announced by the clerk, and shall hold that office from day to day, except that in case of a longer adjournment the chairman of the committee of ways and means shall hold that right of deputy speaker only for twenty-four hours. If we should elect a person to take the chair in the absence of our President pro tempore I do not see any objection to it. I think it would meet the criticisms made by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the change proposed in this rule seems to have no greater purpose than merely to subserve the convenience of the Senate, and make it necessary that they should enter into an election when the President of the Senate finds that he is compelled to be absent from the sittings of this body; and inasmuch as this debate on to-day and on various previous occasions has developed the existence of a distinct objection that there is a constitutional difficulty in the way, I think that the Senate ought to pause and stand on the ground on which it stands in the existing rule, and not venture upon new and untried ground.

For my own part I have had occasion to look into this question and to discuss it in the Senate heretofore somewhat, and I have a fixed opinion, I may say, that the proposed new rule is not in accordance with the spirit and intent of the Constitution. The ground that I take is this: Following as I cheerfully do the Senator from Vermont in all the positions which he has taken down to the last he has stated, and conceding their logical value and soundness, I think I differ with the honorable Senator in this proposition. We agree, as all agree, that there is a legislative day recognized in all parliamentary organizations. It commences with the opening of the House at the time designated by the rule, and it continues during the pleasure of the Senate until an adjournment takes place. That legislative day may spread over two or three calendar days. It has often been the case that the legislative day has spread over two or three days in point of actual time.

Mr. HOAR. It spread over nearly six weeks at the time of the Electoral Commission.

Mr. MORGAN. That I believe to be the fact. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. It spread over quite a long time. In that particular we might have a very serious difficulty upon our records, for here we have one legislative day, and we have another day consisting of three weeks, another day which consists of twenty-one points of time divided into twenty-four hours each. I hold that the legislative day in the Senate of the United States commences when the Senate of the United States meets in proper constitutional organization, and it really does not commence as a legislative day until it does so meet. If the President of the Senate should be absent and should not have designated a Senator to take his place, the Secretary of this body, under this rule, would call the Senate to order, and the first question would be the election of a President pro tempore. If that should consume the time until the adjournment we could hardly say that that was a legislative day in the sense of the Constitution or in the sense of parliamentary law and order; but whenever we should have elected a President pro tempore, then the legislative day would commence, and we have seen that it may continue over very many calendar days and yet remain only one legislative day.

Now I hold, sir, that it is necessay to the constitutional organization of the Senate as a legislative body that either the Vice-President of the United States shall be present or that we shall have elected a President pro tempore who is actually in the chair at that moment of time and discharges the duties of the chair in virtue of the constitutional power given to us to devolve that duty upon him.

It has been said by the Senator from Vermont with great force and clearness that the President of the Senate pro tempore is named in the Constitution as a constitutional officer. He might have gone further and said that some of his duties were prescribed there also, and he might have added further, I think, that there is by implication a tenure of office fixed for him; but at all events he is a constitutional officer with constitutional duties; the Senate, says the Constitution, may choose its President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President. Now, therefore, the person who is to organize the Senate at the beginning of each legislative day must be a person chosen by the Senate and not appointed by a Senator or by one who holds the office of President pro tempore.

There is an argument ab inconvenienti on this also which runs very much further than the inconvenience and might run to the great detriment of the country and its disturbance in respect to very profound political questions and political agitations that might arise. If we have the power to authorize the President pro tempore of this body to designate a Senator who may hold without objection from the Senate his place in the chair of the body for three days, we have equal authority to authorize him to do this thing for two months or during the entire session of Congress, in which event it might happen that the President of the Senate being absent necessarily or for his own convenience would appoint a Senator to his place who would hold until there was a majority in this body able to displace him. Now I hold that the Senate of the United States ought never to be placed in that category; it never ought to be confined in its power and action by a limitation self-imposed which enables a party to hold the occupancy of the chair until the Senate shall rise and order him to leave it. That ought not to be the case. The chair ought always to be held by the express recorded permission of the Senate, indicated by a vote.

It may be also that about the time of the adjournment of the Senate at the conclusion of a Congress the President of the Senate, knowing that political parties had changed in the country and that the next organization would be of a new political complexion from the present one, might designate a Senator who would be in the minority at the next time of meeting, and he could hold, in spite of the Senate, during all the vacation and at the beginning of the next session, if we chose so to empower him, because if we have authority to empower him to do it for three days, we have authority to empower him to do it for the entire vacation. And that I do not hold to be good constitutional law; neither do I hold it to be wise policy or safe proceeding.

Therefore, Mr. President, feeling that there is embarrassment in taking this step forward, and feeling that I can not justify myself in my view of the Constitution or of public policy in doing so, I prefer that we should remain upon the ground that we now occupy. I will therefore vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I paired yesterday with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. I do not see him in the Chamber. I paired with him generally, and as I see most of the gentlemen on the other side are voting in favor of this amendment, I shall withhold my vote on the strength of that pair.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY]. I do not know how he would vote; but if he were here my vote would be "yea."

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. But for that I should vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). The Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL] is necessarily absent. I am paired with him until he returns. But for that I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. I have been requested to announce the pair between the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. The Senator from South Carolina does not know how the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote, and therefore will not vote on this question; but the Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea." The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has already announced the pair between himself and the other Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. COCKRELL. A few days ago I paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] at any time when he might be absent. He was here a few moments ago, but I do not see him in his seat. I should vote "nay" if he was here; I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is absent on account of ill health, and I understand he is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY], who was paired heretofore with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], who is now present.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 29; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No action has been taken as to how the series of rules proposed shall be considered as in Committee of the Whole. The proceeding is somewhat anomalous, and the Chair will hold, in the absence of objection, that this consideration is as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. That, I think, is the rule.

Mr. President, I assented to this modification of the rules for one, being not entirely clear that it was right. At the same time I believed it would promote the convenience of the Senate and the good order of business to allow the presiding officer to designate for a day or two, in his temporary absence, some one to take his place; but I do not wish to see these rules at the very beginning involved in an apparently party controversy. I do not want to vote for any change of our existing rules that meets the decided and united objection of the minority of this body. These rules are made for our convenience, and if I believed there was any substantial constitutional or legal objection to conferring on our presiding officer this temporary power I would not vote for it.

I merely make these remarks now to call the attention of Senators to the fact that if in considering these rules it should appear that any of the proposed rules—I do not care what they are—are subject to an honest, fair party objection, that is to say, that the whole of one side of the Senate is opposed to it, I am against the rule. I hope these rules will be considered as we considered them in committee, without any regard to party lines, and that we shall act upon all these questions, every man upon his own judgment of what is best to promote the order and decorum of the Senate. If I believed that our Democratic friends thought that this was an infringement of the law, or of good policy, or would delay the business of the Senate, or would place in the hands of a presiding officer a dangerous power, as stated by the Senator from Delaware, I would not vote for it; and therefore I shall hold myself perfectly ready, in case I can see any validity in these objections, to vote against this rule when it is considered in the Senate.

Mr. President, as I presume several Senators are going away, and desire to go away to-day, and I understand there is a general desire not to have a session to-morrow, I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FRYE. One moment, if the Senate pleases. Some one interrupted me by conversation while the Presiding Officer was making a statement about the position of this report. I understand it will be the unfinished business for Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is its position under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. As in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FRYE. So I understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not have an executive session? A number of nominations have come in. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection, and I withdraw my motion for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 4 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned till Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 14, 1883.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

APPROVAL OF JOURNAL.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of Tuesday's proceedings.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think my friend had better let the Journal be read.

Mr. COX, of New York. It will take three hours to read it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not insist on the objection.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the reading of that part of the Journal which relates to the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions will be dispensed with. The Chair hears no objection.

The reading of the Journal with the exception indicated was concluded, and it was then approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed the joint resolution (H. Res. 1) extending the time fixed for the joint commission appointed to consider the number and salaries of officers and employés of the two Houses to submit their report.

DESKS AND SEATS IN THE HALL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. HORR. Subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois states the resolution relates to a matter of privilege. The Chair does not know whether it is a matter of privilege until the resolution is read.

Mr. HORR. We may differ about that.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol be directed during the adjournment of Congress for the Christmas and New Year's holidays to remove the desks now in the Hall of the House, and to make such rearrangement of the seats of members as will bring them together in the smallest convenient space without affecting the rights of members to occupy the seats already selected by them under the rules of the House; and that he be also directed to provide suitable writing tables for the use of members, to be placed in the space in the rear and at the sides of the Hall, and also in the lobby at the rear of the Speaker's chair.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not understand that that resolution presents a privileged question. I make the point of order on it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that this question has already been ruled upon by the House, and that such a resolution has been held to be privileged as relating to a matter affecting the convenience and comfort of members.

The SPEAKER. It was decided by Mr. Speaker Blaine in the Forty-second Congress that all matters relating to the arrangement of the Hall and the convenience of members were to be considered and treated as matters of privilege, and a similar ruling was made by Mr. Speaker Keifer in the last Congress.

Mr. CALKINS. That has reference probably only to the desks in the Hall, and not to the removal of seats. This resolution contemplates the removal of the seats.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The very same identical question arose in the Thirty-fifth Congress, and it was held by Speaker Orr then to be a privileged question. That related alone to the desks, as this does.

Mr. CALKINS. That is the point I have made. If this resolution were confined to desks simply, it would probably be within the rulings of both the Speakers who have been named. But this resolution relates also to the seats of members.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the decision made in the Thirty-fifth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that such decisions have been made. Gentlemen will find the ruling stated in the Digest of the last session, page 343.

Mr. CALKINS. That related exclusively to the desks.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. So does this.

Mr. CALKINS. This resolution gives the power to the Architect to rearrange the seats; he is not to interfere with them only so far as may be necessary.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Oh, no; the gentleman misapprehends the resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that it may be reported again

The resolution was again read.

Mr. CALKINS. I will take the ruling of the Chair on the point of order and reserve my right to move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have not relinquished the floor so as to permit the gentleman to make any motion; but I will wait for the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that under the decisions and practice of the House all matters relating to the convenience of members in this Hall are matters of privilege.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to say that I do not wish action to be taken on the resolution to-day. I only wish to invite the attention of members to the resolution, and to the many reasons which will readily occur to them for taking out these desks. I move that the resolution shall lie over till the next meeting of the House, when it may be considered, or, if desired, I will consent to its being referred to a committee, and am willing to yield the floor for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON'S RESIGNATION OF HIS COMMISSION.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on the 23d day of December, 1783, at the city of Annapolis, in the State of Maryland, George Washington surrendered his commission as the commander-in-chief of the patriot forces of America; and

Whereas that act of patriotic devotion to the principles of the Revolution, the success of which established the independence of the Colonies and secured the liberties of the people of the United States, is deserving of special recognition upon the centennial return of that memorable event:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to issue a proclamation, urging the various religious denominations throughout the country to commemorate the 23d day of December, 1883, the one hundredth anniversary of the surrender by George Washington of his commission as the commander-in-chief of the armies of America, and to request that business be suspended on Monday, December 24, and the same be treated as a public holiday.

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to order the national salute to be fired from the various forts throughout the country on Monday, December 24, 1883.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman desire that considered now?

The SPEAKER. That is what the gentleman asks.

Mr. KEIFER. It had better go to a committee.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman had better give a little opportunity to consider the form of this resolution by having it go to some committee, select or otherwise. Whether the observance should be as indicated, by the religious denominations, I venture to question. The other part of the resolution is more satisfactory; some commemoration I do not object to. I hope the gentleman will allow the question of the manner of that commemoration to be considered by some committee.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. In reply to the gentleman I will submit that but a few days will elapse between now and the 23d day of December and action must be taken promptly, if at all.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman will suggest a select committee for that purpose, I have no objections. I think a question will be made, on the part of many gentlemen, upon the mode of observance indicated by this resolution. I shall be very glad to have some change in the phraseology of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The first question is whether there is objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution which has been read. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 65) was accordingly received, and read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. A motion at this time to refer would be in order.

Mr. KASSON. I should prefer that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOBLITZELL] should himself decide the best course to be taken.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. There seems to be a misapprehension about the object of the resolution. There is no intention on my part to have a public holiday established for any future period, but simply to request the religious denominations throughout the country to commemorate, by any mode they may see fit, the 23d day of December, and to request the citizens of the country to treat Monday, the 24th, as a public holiday. They may treat it as a public holiday or not at their pleasure, just as they may choose. There is no obligation on their part to do so. The resolution simply calls public attention to this mode of commemorating a great and patriotic act like that referred to, on the one-hundredth anniversary of the surrender of George Washington of his commission as commander-in-chief of the army.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman will remember that it is a proposition for the President to issue a proclamation.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. That could hardly be done, I think, except with the consent of both Houses of Congress. Then there is the further proposition that the observance should be by religious denominations everywhere. I do not think the occasion one to be given such special direction; and it is also a question whether a specific holiday should be made, instead of some specific observance of the event. I hope the gentleman will allow the resolution to be referred to a select committee of any number he pleases.

Mr. TUCKER. Say of five members.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] suggests a committee of five. I move, therefore, as the better way to consider the matter, that the joint resolution be referred to a select committee of five members, to be appointed by the Speaker, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOBLITZELL] of course to be the chairman.

Mr. TALBOTT. I move to amend by making the number thirteen, so as to have one member from each of the original thirteen States.

Mr. TUCKER. That would be too large a committee.

Mr. TALBOTT. Very well; I will withdraw the suggestion.

The motion of Mr. KASSON was then agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTURBANCES AT DANVILLE, VA.

Mr. HORR. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution I send to the desk. Let it be read, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House bring to the notice of the President the case of the recent murder of several persons claimed to have been citizens of the United States, and the serious injury of several other persons, also claimed to be such citizens, at Danville, in the State of Virginia, in the hope that the President may ascertain whether the said persons so murdered and injured were citizens of the United States, and, if so, whether the killing and injuring of said citizens, if they were such, were in contravention of the provisions of the municipal law of Virginia or of any law of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. CABELL. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] wish to be heard?

The SPEAKER. The House has not yet determined whether the resolution shall be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. MORRISON and others objected.

Mr. CABELL. I do not wish to make any objection——

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by several gentlemen.

Mr. CABELL. As the representative of the people so unjustly assailed by the resolution just offered by the member from Michigan, I have to say that not recognizing the right of Congress to interfere or intervene in reference to a matter occurring just prior to a State election, at which neither Federal officers were to be elected nor Federal interests involved, and while the people of Danville on the occasion referred to did no more than any other respectable people would have done under like circumstances, yet neither they nor I will make any objection to an investigation. [Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is out of order. The resolution is not before the House.

Mr. HORR. I hope the objection may be withdrawn.

Mr. CABELL. I did not nor do I mean to object. The people of Danville are willing for the fullest and freest investigation of this matter. Having nothing to fear, I shall interpose no objection; but——

Mr. HORR. As I understand, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] objected.

Mr. MORRISON. I object for the present, as the President of the United States knows as much about this matter as we do.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not before the House.

REPEAL OF TEST-OATH.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to consider at this time a bill for the repeal of the iron-clad oath. It is a standing reproach to Congress, and I believe everybody will consent to abolish it.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask whether there is objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to repeal the act of July 2, 1862, and such sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States as perpetuate the oath prescribed by said act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HORR and Mr. BOUTELLE. I object.

Mr. COBB. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I ask unanimous consent—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BRENTS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion to adjourn so we may go on introducing bills by consent.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 13, 1883.

Mr. ANDERSON. That relates to a matter of an appropriation merely, and I wish to ask if it should not properly go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. It relates to the construction of a bridge over a navigable stream, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. ANDERSON. No, sir; it is not a navigable stream. The state of the case is simply this: The Legislature of Kansas passed an act authorizing the Secretary of War to construct this bridge, it being simply a State matter. It is therefore a question that involves an appropriation, and should go to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks under the practice of the House it should go to the Committee on Commerce. If, however, that committee upon examining the communication and papers accompanying it come to the conclusion that it should go to the Committee on Appropriations, the change of reference can then be made.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 13, 1883.

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a letter from the Secretary of War, dated the 8th instant, and its accompanying papers, relative to the reconveyance to Mr. Thomas Mulvehill, of Pittsburgh, Pa., of certain land erroneously conveyed by him to the United States, the particular facts regarding which are fully set forth in the inclosed copy of Senate Executive Document No. 46, Forty-seventh Congress, second session.

It appearing that the land in question was through error alone transferred to the United States, and that to retransfer the same to Mr. Mulvehill would be a measure of simple justice, it is recommended that such legislation be had as may be necessary to restore to Mr. Mulvehill his rights in the premises.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE. I ask leave, without previous notice, to introduce several bills touching the building up of our Navy. It does not seem to me that there are many subjects that will be likely to come before Congress at this session of more immediate importance than this. The bills which I shall introduce, with the leave of the Senate, relate to the organization of the Navy, its personnel, the subject of promotions, and also as to what may be called the larger side of the subject, the building of new ships. The last Congress took an important step in that direction, but the rapid disappearance of our old wooden ships tells us too plainly that the more important work of further increasing our Navy in its force of ships ought to be attended to at once.

These bills have been prepared, I may say, with a good deal of care and attention, and I hope that the Naval Committee will take them into consideration at an early day and give the matter a most thorough and complete consideration, and report such measures to this body as may meet with its approval.

I do not say that I am wedded, for one, to every provision in these bills. They ought to be scrutinized carefully, and whenever anything is done and reported to this body, I hope and believe that we may be able to consider it with reference not to the past but to the future, with reference not to any political standpoint but to what is a great and increasing need for the whole Republic.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

A bill (S. 697) to promote the efficiency of the Navy;

A bill (S. 698) to authorize the construction of additional steel vessels for the Navy; and

A bill (S. 699) for the establishment of naval or coaling stations.

Mr. DOLPH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 700) to extend the limits of the port of Portland as a port of entry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 701) making appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Columbia River, in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 702) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the mouth of Yaquina Bay, in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 703) making appropriation for continuing the construction of the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia, in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 704) to so amend sections 4693 and 4695 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as to extend the right of pension to steamboatmen and others acting under orders from United States officers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 705) to provide for the retirement of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Montgomery C. Meigs with the rank according to which he is now assigned to duty; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE HASKELL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. DUDLEY C. HASKELL, late a member of the House from the State of Kansas, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels it to be a duty, according to previous custom, to lay before the Senate the resolutions just received from the House of Representatives. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. DUDLEY C. HASKELL, late a Representative from the State of Kansas.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these proceedings to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a token of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

Mr. INGALLS. Advised yesterday while in Massachusetts, by telegraph, of the untimely, though not wholly unexpected, death of my colleague in the House of Representatives, I hastened to Washington and have just arrived to learn that the sad procession bearing his remains to his home has already departed.

This is not the time to recount his many virtues nor to rehearse the services which he has rendered the Republic. Suffice it now to say that in his death the House has lost a most efficient member; the nation has been deprived of the services of an eminent statesman; his State mourns a distinguished and honored public servant, while I, Mr. President, suffer in his departure a personal bereavement that is irreparable.

In accordance with the usual observance upon such melancholy occasions I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Senator from Kansas whether he desires that a committee of Senators shall be named to attend the funeral, as the custom has been, and which was arranged for by his colleague [Mr. PLUMB]?

Mr. INGALLS. I was not aware, in consequence of my very recent arrival, that that action had not already been taken. If it has not, I would suggest that a committee of three Senators be designated by the Chair for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks that the Chair designate a committee of three Senators to attend the obsequies of the late member of the House of Representatives from Kansas. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair will name the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 17, 1883.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D.D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SCALES. I rise to a question of privilege. I present the credentials of my colleague, Mr. Thomas G. Skinner, Representative-elect from the first district of North Carolina, and ask that he be sworn in.

Mr. KEIFER. We desire first to have the certificate read. After that it is my purpose to offer a resolution relative to this matter.

Mr. REED. I would suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] whether he had not better present that matter on some other day than the present.

Mr. SCALES. If there is to be objection, I agree that the question shall go over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina makes the motion that Mr. Skinner be sworn in, and consents that the motion shall stand over.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. HOLMAN moved that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. DUDLEY C. HASKELL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow I perform the sad duty of announcing to the House the death of my lamented colleague, Hon. DUDLEY C. HASKELL, late a Representative from the State of Kansas, who died at his residence in this city on yesterday morning, the 16th instant, at 28 minutes past 4 o'clock.

With the earliest tints of that sacred day which typifies to the Christian the resurrection of the dead his spirit was severed from the jurisdiction of this Congress of the United States of America, and joined that sublime general assembly of representatives from all nations, continents, and centuries. As the babe sleeps, so he slept out of life and awoke in that immortality given and vouchsafed by our Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. HASKELL served through the last three Congresses with ever-increasing ability, fidelity, and efficiency. Had he been spared to occupy this seat, now draped with the emblems of mourning but brightened with the flowers of the Christian's hope, he would have taken high and deserved rank in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Of his never-questioned purity of life and force of character, of his ripe legislative experience and broad statesmanship, this is not the time to speak. On some future day the House will be asked to suspend its ordinary proceedings and pay fitting tribute of respect to the memory of one whose words and deeds have become an inseparable part of its history.

And now, in behalf of all my colleagues, and expressing the unanimous wish of that constituency which so long, so ably, and so earnestly Mr. HASKELL has represented and which loved him so well, I ask for the action of the House upon the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. DUDLEY C. HASKELL, late a Representative from the State of Kansas.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these proceedings to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a token of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously.

Before announcing the result,

The SPEAKER appointed the following as members of the committee to escort the remains of Mr. HASKELL to his place of residence: Mr. RUSSELL of Massachusetts, Mr. KASSON of Iowa, Mr. BROWNE of Indiana, Mr. RYAN of Kansas, Mr. LE FEVRE of Ohio, Mr. BURNES of Missouri, Mr. HANBACK of Kansas, and Mr. GRAVES of Missouri.

Then, in accordance with the vote on the above resolutions (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Wednesday next.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 793) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. WILLIAMS (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 794) for the reclamation of arid and waste lands in certain Western States and Territories; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MILLER, of California, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 795) to adjust certain accounts between the United States and the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 796) granting to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sale of public lands in that State; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 797) for the relief of William Fowler, sr., of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 798) for the relief of William D. Haley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McMILLAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 799) to establish an assay office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 800) to refund certain internal-revenue taxes to the Deposit Bank of Glasgow, Glasgow, Ky.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLATT asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 29) for the relief of Miss Eliza A. White; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRILL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 30) authorizing Rear-Admiral J. W. A. Nicholson to accept a medal conferred upon him by the King of Sweden and Norway; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PAY OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. BUTLER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 31) to pay the employés of the two Houses of Congress their salaries for the current month on the 20th instant; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear it read in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. What is the object of it?

Mr. BUTLER. The object is simply to give the employés their pay before the holidays.

Mr. INGALLS. That is easy enough to understand; but why is it necessary to pass a bill at this time?

Mr. BUTLER. It is not a bill, but a joint resolution. It is necessary because they have not been paid on the 15th, as is the custom, I understand. It is the customary resolution, I am told. I was requested to introduce it.

Mr. ALLISON. This has been done frequently before. It occurs to me, however, that there might be some confusion under the resolution in view of the changes that are going on in the House of Representatives with reference to employés. What employés are to be paid?

Mr. BUTLER. All the employés are provided for.

Mr. SHERMAN. If this is the order I will object at present until we can at least look into it. If it merely antedates the date of payment to officers in the actual service of the United States I should not object to it, but I should like to look at it. Let the resolution go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state for the information of the Senate that in the opinion of the Chair the form of the enacting clause of the resolution is such that it is a regular constitutional joint resolution which will require the assent of the President of the United States. It is not a concurrent resolution, as they are usually called.

Mr. SHERMAN. The form had better be changed. I object to its consideration until to-morrow.

Mr. INGALLS. Why not let the resolution go to the appropriate committee to be acted on and reported? I suggest that order; or let it lie over.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not the slightest choice as to what direction it takes. I introduced it simply to give the employés their money before they went home for the Christmas holidays. That was my object, and I am perfectly indifferent as to the course that is pursued in regard to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it had better be referred to a committee. I do not think any one will care to interpose an objection to it after it has been referred and reported back to the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not the slightest objection if the committee will report it in time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the committee will report it back in a day or two, because the Senate will probably take a recess in the course of a few days.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, it was Ordered, That J. F. Beale have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate his extracts of a brief in relation to the claims of certain citizens of Washington, D. Mr. HARRIS. I ask for an order to withdraw from the files of the Senate and refer to the Committee on Claims the petition and papers in respect of the claim of John W. Franklin, executor of the last will of John Armfield, a bill having already been introduced and referred to that committee, and there having been no adverse report.

Ordered, That the petition and papers in the matter of providing for a settlement with the Indians who were parties to the treaty concluded at Buffalo Creek, in the State of New York, on the 15th day of January, 1838, for the unexecuted stipulation of that treaty, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, there having been no adverse report.

Ordered, That the petition and papers relative to the increase of the salaries and pay of the chaplains in the Army be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, there having been no adverse report.

On motion of Mr. DOLPH, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers relating to the claim of Thomas J. Miller be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, subject to the rules of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. HILL, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the claim of Daniel Connor be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of A. H. Emery be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims, there having been no adverse report.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. MILLER, of California, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the Senate with copies of the correspondence in relation to the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed the 19th day of April, 1850, which has passed between the two governments, not heretofore communicated.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to furnish the Senate copies of mortgages given by Texas Pacific Railroad on lands granted by act of March 3, 1871; also to inform the Senate the names of railroad corporations now claiming lands that were not earned during the lifetime of the grant, together with the number of acres claimed by each of said roads.

OFFICERS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution offered by me yesterday in respect to the officers of the Senate.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. SHERMAN was read, as follows:

Ordered, That the Senate do now proceed to the election of the following officers in the order named:

First, Secretary of the Senate; second, Chief Clerk; third, Principal Executive Clerk; fourth, Chaplain; fifth, Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. PENDLETON. I should like to ask my honorable colleague why it is necessary to proceed to the election of officers of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. As soon as the resolution is taken up I can explain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] that debate on the merits of the resolution is not yet in order. The only question now is whether the Senate will consider it at this time. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to proceed to the consideration of the resolution which has been reported.

The question being put, it was declared that the "noes" appeared to prevail.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who is necessarily absent from the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY] upon all questions, but I now feel authorized to transfer this pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] who is absent. I vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. My colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. My colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] has been summoned home by the death of a very near relative, and I beg leave to announce that during his absence he is paired with the Senator from Vermont, the Presiding Officer of the Senate [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. CAMDEN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. KENNA] has been called home by the death of a near relative, and he is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Logan,	Platt,
Anthony,	Hale,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Harrison,	Mahone,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Hawley,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Miller of Cal.,	Sherman,
Conger,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Wilson.
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,
Dolph,	Lapham,	Pike,

NAYS—30.

Bayard,	Fair,	Jonas,	Ransom,
Beck,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	George,	Lamar,	Slater,
Butler,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Vance,
Call,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Walker,
Camden,	Groome,	Morgan,	Williams.
Coke,	Harris,	Pendleton,
Colquitt,	Jackson,	Pugh,

ABSENT—12.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Pa.,	Farley,	Morrill,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Plumb,	Voorhees.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. Is the Senate ready for the question? Senators in the affirmative will say "ay;" Senators in the negative will say "no." The "ayes" appear to have it. The "ayes" have it; the resolution is agreed to, and it is ordered that the Senate now proceed, first, to the election of a Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that General Anson G. McCook, of the city of New York, be elected Secretary of the Senate. I believe the rule requires it to be done by ballot.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the rule as to a ballot, as its terms are expressed, only applies to the formation of committees, and a resolution or order therefore will suffice, which the Senator had better reduce to writing probably for the convenience of the clerks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will then simply make a motion. I move that Anson G. McCook, of New York, be declared Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It ought to be in the form of a resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in the form of an order or resolution. The Secretary will be kind enough to reduce it to writing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would be more convenient for journalizing if the Senator from Ohio would offer it in the form of a resolution, "Resolved that So-and-so be, and he hereby is, chosen Secretary of the Senate," as the Chair is informed that is the old phraseology.

Mr. SHERMAN. I then offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That Anson G. McCook, of New York, is hereby chosen Secretary of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GARLAND. According to the form by which Mr. Shober was unanimously made Acting Secretary it should read, "Be and he is hereby appointed." I move to so amend it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I used the word "chosen" at the suggestion of the Chair, supposing that to be the regular form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed at the desk that the word "chosen" has been the ancient form.

Mr. SHERMAN. The word "chosen" seems to me a better phrase than the word "appointed."

Mr. GARLAND. The usual form has been "be and is hereby appointed."

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it read "be and he is hereby chosen." Probably the word "appointed" is not quite the thing. The word "chosen" I think is the better phrase.

Mr. INGALLS. The Constitution says that we shall "choose" our "other officers."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio modify his resolution by inserting "be and he hereby is?"

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it read "be and he hereby is chosen."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move to amend the resolution of my colleague by striking out the name of Anson G. McCook and substituting that of L. Q. Washington.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON]. Is the Senate ready for the question? [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and upon all votes that may hereafter be taken until his return.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. HAMPTON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VEST. I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Bayard,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	George,	Lamar,	Slater,
Brown,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Vance,
Butler,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Walker,
Call,	Groome,	Morgan,	Williams.
Camden,	Harris,	Pendleton,
Coke,	Jackson,	Pugh,
Colquitt,	Jonas,	Ransom,

NAYS—32.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lapham,	Pike,
Blair,	Hale,	Logan,	Platt,
Bowen,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Mahone,	Sabin,
Conger,	Hill,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,	Wilson.

ABSENT—15.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Sawyer,
Anthony,	Farley,	Miller of Cal.,	Vest,
Cameron of Pa.,	Garland,	Morrill,	Voorhees.
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Plumb,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. Is the Senate ready for the question? [Putting the question.] The "ayes" appear to have it; the "ayes" have it, and the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The gentleman who has just been elected Secretary of the Senate is present, and, in accordance with the rule of the Senate, I ask that he may be sworn in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He will present himself at the desk and receive the oaths.

Anson G. McCook was escorted to the President's desk by Mr. MILLER, of New York, and the oaths prescribed by the acts of June 1, 1789, and July 2, 1862, were administered to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order of the Senate the next officer to be elected is Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That Charles W. Johnson, of Minnesota, be, and he is hereby, chosen Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. PENDLETON. The present incumbent of that place was selected by the Democratic party. He is also the nominee of the Democratic party at this time. He has performed, as we believe, his duties in such a manner as to entitle him to the confidence of the Senate.

It would be a vain thing to move that the name of Mr. Shober be substituted for that of the gentleman whose name is contained in the resolution, because if the resolution be defeated Mr. Shober, being in office, retains it. I will therefore not move an amendment to the resolution, but will state that the votes upon this side of the Chamber are given with a view of manifesting our desire not to change the Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PENDLETON. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that I am opposed to the resolution, and shall therefore vote against it.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY]. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that I am paired on this question with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lapham,	Pike,
Blair,	Hale,	Logan,	Platt,
Bowen,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Mahone,	Sabin,
Conger,	Hill,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,	Wilson.

NAYS—29.

Bayard,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	George,	Lamar,	Slater,
Brown,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Vance,
Butler,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Walker,
Call,	Groome,	Morgan,	Williams.
Camden,	Harris,	Pendleton,

ABSENT—15.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Sawyer,
Anthony,	Farley,	Miller of Cal.,	Vest,
Cameron of Pa.,	Garland,	Morrill,	Voorhees.
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Plumb,

So the resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state in respect to this officer and all the others named in the order of the Senate that the taking of the oath in the presence of the Senate is not required. It can be taken in the Secretary's Office. The next order of the Senate is to proceed to the election of a Principal Executive Clerk.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That James R. Young, of Pennsylvania, be, and is hereby, chosen Principal Executive Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again reported.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution.

Mr. PENDLETON. I repeat the statement that I made just now in relation to the election of a Chief Clerk of the Senate, that the gentleman who is now occupying the place of Chief Executive Clerk was put in office by the will of those who were then in the majority of the Senate. He is now the nominee of the Democratic party for the office. He still retains the confidence of the Senate as having discharged his duties admirably well. I will not delay the Senate by making a motion to amend the resolution by inserting the name of Col. Henry E. Peyton; but the confidence of those who put him in office will be manifested by the fact of voting against the resolution to supersede him by another election.

Mr. SHERMAN. I only desire to say that the gentleman who is nominated for this office held the office for a number of years to the entire satisfaction of every Senator on either side of the House, a gentleman of accomplishments and experience. He was an officer of the Senate when I left some years ago—Mr. Young, of Pennsylvania. I do not think it is worth while to waste words about this matter; indeed I had hoped that we should have this whole matter disposed of without any one being called upon to say a single word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. KENNA] with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lapham,	Pike,
Blair,	Hale,	Logan,	Platt,
Bowen,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Mahone,	Sabin,
Conger,	Hill,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,	Wilson.

NAYS—29.

Bayard,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	George,	Lamar,	Slater,
Brown,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Vance,
Butler,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Walker,

Allison,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Sawyer,
Anthony,	Farley,	Miller of Cal.,	Vest,
Cameron of Pa.,	Garland,	Morrill,	Voorhees.
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Plumb,

So the resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next thing in order under the resolution of the Senate is the election of a Chaplain.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That Rev. Elias De Witt Huntley, of the District of Columbia, be, and hereby is, chosen Chaplain of the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I think the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio illustrates very properly the estimate the other side of the Chamber put upon the civil-service-reform bill passed at the last session. Not content with removing every officer of the Senate who has any considerable salary, the proposition now is to remove the Chaplain of the body, who performs the duty of offering prayer as acceptably as any other gentleman can, and who on this very morning offered up a devout prayer for every member of this body. And yet the proposition is now not only to remove every officer who has any considerable salary attached to the functions of his office, but to remove a gentleman who has prayed diligently and fervently for every member of the Senate for the last four years.

I say, sir, and I rise to emphasize the fact that this proceeding illustrates the attachment of the other side of this Chamber to the principles of the bill we passed last winter; and, sir, I think the country will understand it. Notwithstanding we passed a civil-service-reform bill, the party now in power in this Chamber, whenever they have an opportunity, will ignore the principles of that bill entirely, as they are doing by their proceedings in this case.

I simply rose to call attention to this fact. This change of officers is now carried to a position which has but a nominal salary attached to it. I concede the ability of the other side not only to take the more prominent offices but to take even the chaplaincy away from this side of the Senate; but I say again it illustrates most clearly and forcibly the attachment of the other side of this Chamber to the principles of that bill which was passed at the last session and which was loudly advocated by many gentlemen on that side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PENDLETON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. HARRISON (when the name of Mr. VOORHEES was called). I was requested by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to announce his pair on this question with my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 32, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lapham,	Pike,
Blair,	Hale,	Logan,	Platt,
Bowen,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,

So the resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). Next under the order of the Senate is the choice of a Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That William P. Canaday, of North Carolina, be, and is hereby, chosen Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I repeat the statement which I made before in relation to the election of the various officers of the Senate. The present incumbent is the choice of the present minority of the Senate for this position and retains the confidence of the Senate for having faithfully performed the duties of his office, and as, if the resolution is not passed, he will still retain the office, I will therefore not move an amendment that the name of Col. R. J. Bright be inserted in the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]?

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio on the other side, as he made a remark about restoring a gentleman to a clerkship a little while ago because he had formerly performed valuable services, what distinguished services the present nominee of the Republican caucus has performed to entitle him to the place for which it has now nominated him and what objection gentlemen on the other side have to the present imcumbent, if he will be kind enough to tell us.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not care now—and certainly at this stage of the business it is not necessary—to go into a matter of detail in regard to the personal qualifications of the gentlemen named. The Senator from Ohio is doing precisely what the Senator from Kentucky would do with a straight face and without any apologies or excuses, and I have none to give. The gentleman who is nominated for Sergeant-at-Arms is a gentleman well known on both sides of the Chamber as a man of character and standing, well fitted to discharge the duties of the office for which he is nominated. I have not one word to say, and have not the heart to say it, against the incumbent.

Mr. BECK. I happened to be here a few years ago when there was an immense amount of what I then thought was false pretense or pretended indignation at the outrage which was said to be committed when the Democrats elected a few officers of the Senate, retaining a very large proportion of men who belonged to the Republican party who were here then and are in office yet. I knew when they pretended to be so indignant at our action and I know now that the whole so-called civil-service-reform system is recognized by the Senators on the other side whenever it stands in their way as being an absolute humbug. Their conduct now illustrates it. They are seeking to remove and will of course remove an officer who they know is the very best the Senate has ever had in this position, and they propose to put in his place a man who has never held any position here and whose fitness is to be determined I suppose by the number of the present employés who are Democrats that he can turn out and the number of men he can put in their places, not because of their fitness for the positions, but because of their capacity to aid in carrying elections for Republican nominees elsewhere, notably in North Carolina, from whence they have brought him, and in Virginia where they have secured such valuable allies.

As a specimen of the lectures we received from the Republican leaders, the distinguished and generally the most moderate of all the members on the other side, the gentleman who has been spoken of and I suppose will be made our presiding officer—I allude to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY]—at that time gave us the benefit of a speech, in which he said:

> Mr. President, I am too well aware that nothing which I can say, nothing which any one may say, will arrest or modify the foregone determination to make a sweeping change of the officers and servants of the Senate; a change demanded, not by any deficiencies or neglect of duty on their part, but by the inexorable necessities of political partisanship. Yet, as one who has served long in this body, who has paid some attention to its rules, and who has a profound respect, nay a reverence, for its precedents and its traditions, I am unwilling to see the measure initiated without recording my protest and uttering my unavailing warning to the majority against the personal discomfort and inconvenience to which they are subjecting themselves and their associates and the danger to which they are exposing the orderly and decorous transaction of the business of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. When was that speech made?

Mr. BECK. That speech was made on the 24th day of March, 1879. Again that distinguished gentleman said in a colloquy with Mr. Hill, of Georgia, on the 15th of April, 1879:

> Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If the Senate should become Republican in 1881, two years from now, will he oppose a change of the officers then?
> Mr. ANTHONY. I will answer that when the time comes, and I hope to see it. I can not tell whether another rebellion may not break out in the South. There seem to be signs of it now.
> Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If a rebellion does not break out, how then? Will you move to change them or not? Suppose we do not rebel?
> Mr. ANTHONY. It will depend upon the manner in which they fulfill the duties of their offices. I do not think I shall ever be found advocating the removal of officers of this body who have performed their duties with fidelity, with honesty, and with intelligence.

And yet to-day that distinguished gentleman—he is paired I believe at this moment, but he was in the Senate a little while ago—is voting to dismiss a man of known capacity, fidelity, and integrity, with every element that he can claim any man possesses, and to put in his place a new man, who has never had a test in any shape or form that would enable him to say that he is even competent to perform the duties which the present incumbent of the office of Sergeant-at-Arms now performs so well.

Other gentlemen took part in the debate. I am not going to read all that was said, but to refer to some things simply for the edification of the Republican gentlemen in the Senate. They have always preached civil-service reform and have tried to make the country believe they were going to carry it out. I always knew that they did not intend to do it. I think the country will know it after this performance. In order to avoid being personal, perhaps I had better select extracts from the speeches of those who are not here now, but who are known to be leaders—Mr. Hamlin, of Maine, followed Mr. ANTHONY, saying, among other things:

> Individually I care very little about the matter; but as a Senator I do say that I regret to see this sweeping removal of the best officers we have and the putting in their places of men who, if equally qualified, will require a long and varied experience before they can discharge their duties equally well. I had hoped the mad spirit of partisanship would not thus run riot in this body, but that the counsels and the practices and the precedents of this body might in a small degree have been observed. It is not to be so, however, and I can only say again that I regret it exceedingly.

And the whole Republican side of the Senate followed these leaders, and told us that a revolution was about to be precipitated on the country since their sage counsels were not followed, although, as everybody knows, we did keep in place nearly all the best officers they had and they are here now.

Another distinguished Senator, I think I may say one more distinguished and able than any now left on that side of the Chamber, Mr. Conkling, of New York, said, among other things:

> I made a general remark, not intended to touch any applicant for place in the Senate; perhaps it was an impatient remark, for I do not deny that I sometimes feel impatient at the cant which beclouds professions and practice in appointing and removing public officers. There are people whose idea of purity and reform seems to consist in canting incessantly about purity, in keeping up continuing sensation and proclamation as if they were holier than other people—

We heard a good deal of it then—> and then when they find themselves in possession of the power to select or cause the selection of public agents, to divide with considerable impartiality their attention between such knaves and such fools as they feel indebted to for adulation or service. There are people who seem to think that something in the way of the "reform" is effected when a competent honest man is expelled from place and a rascal, a pretender, or an incompetent is put in.

> I was disclaiming for myself all such belief, without reference to these particular individuals, as I think the RECORD will show; and I said that my idea of civil-service reform was not to put out a faithful man who was competent—perhaps I said also that I did not believe even in cases of a vacancy in putting in either a knave or a fool, even if that knave or that fool was able to stand on the corners of the street, make a long face, wring his hands, deplore the shortcomings of other people, and blow a horn, and say to the passers-by, "If you wish to see holiness look at me."

That was the style of debate we had in 1879. I know that the present Republican nominee will be elected. I assume that he is selected because of his disposition to remove everybody who is now here who calls himself a Democrat. I see in the papers that a debate was had the other day in the caucus on a proposition to restore the rule, that the Senator from Vermont regretted the repeal of during the debate in 1879, submitting all removals to the presiding officer for his approval; but that might have tied the hands of the distinguished gentleman who is to be Sergeant-at-Arms in his wholesale removals, and the proposition was defeated. I have seen many statements as to caucus arrangements in the last few days. One thing I know. Several very distinguished Senators from the large and important States in the Northwest are left without chairmanships and some new ones elsewhere have obtained them who do not openly admit that they are in harmony with the Republican party majority. But that may perhaps have nothing to do with this question. I thought I would call the attention of the country if I could to the value of their professions by asking the Senator from Ohio the question what was the objection to the present incumbent and what were supposed to be the particular qualifications of the man proposed. While his reasons were given very freely in the case of a clerk by the Senator from Ohio, he could not well afford to give them to the Senate or to the country in this particular case, in whose hands nearly all the patronage of the Senate is held.

Oh, Mr. President, it all amounts to just this: that the Republican party can be very loud in its professions and its protestations and its clamor when the Democracy see fit to do anything they hope to make political capital out of, but the moment they get the power, their civil-service rules, their laws, their pretenses that they are going to regard the rights of men who faithfully discharge their duty in the public service are all disregarded, especially when they can substitute somebody who will aid them in any way or anywhere in their political campaigns, and they do not care much how or in what way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 32, nays 28; as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the President of the United States and the House of Representatives be notified of the election of Anson G. McCook as Secretary of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. FRYE. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that at the adjournment of the Senate at a preceding sitting when the proposed rules were under consideration they were being considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The present printed rules do not seem to provide for that method of procedure, but it is one of obvious convenience, and will save entering on the journals various discussions and amendments that are proposed. The report of the Committee on Rules is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the Clerk will report the rule under consideration at the adjournment of the Senate when the matter was last under consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask a question, whether it is always understood that when we pass from one rule it is no longer amendable; or are we to consider Rule No. 1, for example, now, and then, at the will of any Senator afterwards, go back to Rule No. 1 and make amendments to it, or are we to consider these rules seriatim for amendment and then pass from them?

Mr. FRYE. I understand we are to consider them seriatim, and they are only open to amendment, having once before passed, after the report has been made from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. That ought to be unanimously agreed to, if it is not already the understanding.

Mr. FRYE. I understood it was unanimously agreed to when the rules were first taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the question now, so that there may be no doubt about it. The Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, asks that in the consideration of these rules as in Committee of the Whole they be proceeded with seriatim, and that when the consideration of one rule has been concluded and the next rule taken up it shall not be in order to go back to a preceding rule in committee or until the matter is reported to the Senate, when all amendments will be again in order. Is there objection to this?

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Chair be kind enough to restate the proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine in charge of this report asks unanimous consent that in Committee of the Whole the consideration of the rules be proceeded with seriatim, and that when the consideration of one rule is completed and the next rule is taken up it shall not be in order to go back to consider the previous rule again in committee; but when reported to the Senate the whole matter will be open.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the effect of the arrangement be to allow a vote to be taken in the Senate on such amendments as are offered in Committee of the Whole and in the Senate proceed with the report as if the set of rules was a bill, on which we proceed item by item, and not go back upon it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands in the case of a bill in Committee of the Whole that although a particular section may have been disposed of and another gone to, when no special question is pending a motion to amend any part of the bill is in order. But the Senator from Maine asks that, treating these rules in Committee of the Whole, when one rule is disposed of in committee it shall be considered as a final disposition of it in committee. The Chair will state that when the rules are reported to the Senate everything will be at large and open to amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. In the Senate a separate vote may be demanded on any amendment made in Committee of the Whole or any new amendment may be offered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly. Wherever the question is capable of division, as rule by rule, or paragraph by paragraph, or separate points, under the rules of the Senate, the Chair thinks it is open to division, and certainly to every species of amendment which may be offered. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The rules are now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. Does the Senator from Maine desire to go on with the consideration of the rules this afternoon?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we can go on an hour or two.

Mr. FRYE. I should like very much to go on an hour or so. Of course I do not intend at this early period in the session to undertake to force the matter, but I should like to go on an hour longer to-day with these rules.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. So many Senators are absent that I think the Senate had better not enter on that matter this afternoon. I am inclined to move an adjournment.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement? I understand that the Speaker of the House has said very lately—I suppose I am not transgressing the rule in mentioning it—that the committees there will not probably be announced before Friday, though possibly they may be on Thursday. Of course therefore there can be no adjournment for the holidays until Friday. We have these four days here, and it seems to me that we might dispose of this entire matter and of some legislative business besides by working ordinary hours this week. In that way we shall save a great deal of time which will otherwise be spent here in midsummer.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I hope that we shall continue the discussion of this subject this afternoon until 5 o'clock and every legislative day thereafter till the holiday adjournment until it is disposed of. No time is more appropriate for this matter than the present. We shall in the course of two or three days at the outside undoubtedly adjourn over the holidays, not to reassemble until early in January. At that time both Houses will be actively engaged in legislative business, the committees will have been formed and will be continually making reports, and we shall have little leisure to devote to a subject as comparatively unimportant as the discussion of the rules of the Senate. I hope, therefore, the Senator from Maine will resist any motion for adjournment and ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of this important report.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will submit the motion. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FRYE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLAIR (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand that I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. RANSOM. I am requested to state that on all these questions the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. EDMUNDS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], and on consulting with his friends I think I ought to withdraw my vote. I did not suppose this was a question where the pair would apply, but I am very glad to apply it if his friends desire. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bayard,	Gibson,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,
Beck,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Vance,
Call,	Jonas,	Pike,	Walker.
Cameron of Wis.,	Jones, of Florida,	Pugh,
Coke,	Lamar,	Ransom,

NAYS—27.

Colquitt,	Harrison,	Lapham,	Platt,
Conger,	Hawley,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Cullom,	Hill,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Frye,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
George,	Jackson	Morgan,	Wilson.
Hale,	Jones, of Nevada,	Morrill,

ABSENT—27.

Aldrich,	Cameron of Pa.,	Groome,	Plumb,

Butler,	Farley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Williams.
Camden,	Garland,	Palmer,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr HOAR in the chair). The Secretary will read the pending rule.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the first proposed rule, as follows:

RULE I.

APPOINTMENT OF A SENATOR TO THE CHAIR.

1. In the absence of the Vice-President, the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore.

2. In the absence of the Vice-President, and pending the election of a President pro tempore, the Secretary of the Senate or in his absence the Chief Clerk shall perform the duties of the chair.

3. The President pro tempore shall have the right to name in open Senate, or, if absent, in writing, a Senator to perform the duties of the Chair; and the Senator so designated may discharge such duties for a period not exceeding three days, unless the Senate shall otherwise order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the rule just read.

Mr. GARLAND. We had better take the vote separately on each clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas requests a division of the question. It will be so ordered, and the first clause will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read as follows:

1. In the absence of the Vice-President, the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore.

The clause was agreed to.

The next clause was read, as follows:

2. In the absence of the Vice-President, and pending the election of a President pro tempore, the Secretary of the Senate or in his absence the Chief Clerk shall perform the duties of the chair.

The clause was agreed to.

The next clause was read, as follows:

3. The President pro tempore shall have the right to name in open Senate, or, if absent, in writing, a Senator to perform the duties of the chair; and the Senator so designated may discharge such duties for a period not exceeding three days, unless the Senate shall otherwise order.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask whether it is in order now to propose an amendment which shall limit the power of the President pro tempore to call a Senator to the chair to a period not exceeding an adjournment. I ask that because the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] proposed an amendment which was in substance that which I have indicated, and I do not wish to violate the rules by taking another vote on the same subject in Committee of the Whole. I am inclined to believe that the effect of the vote of the Senate acceding to the proposition that it is competent under the Constitution or that it is expedient under our present condition of laws to allow the President pro tempore of the Senate to nominate in writing or in the open Senate a substitute for himself who shall have his powers for three days, at least shall preside in the Senate for three days—I am inclined to believe that the effect of that vote could not have been fully considered by the Senate, or they would not have given their approval to the proposition.

In the first place, granting that the President pro tempore is a constitutional officer who is prescribed in the Constitution itself and who in the absence of the Vice-President must be elected by the Senate or otherwise there would be an improper or a defective organization of the body, when he is elected his powers in this body are those of a Senator with those of the Vice-President superadded. If for three days the only person who can append his signature to bills, who can attest the validity, the accuracy, of measures as engrossed or enrolled under the rules of the Senate, may absent himself and no person be here who has the authority to sign the bills as they come from the House of Representatives, must there not be for that period of time an arrestation of legislation and a delay in the signature of bills before they can pass to the Executive? Must there not be therefore a repudiation for three days of time of the action of the other House of Congress as well as of the Senate if this power is to be given to the President pro tempore? Because if it shall be held that the substitute for the President pro tempore has not the powers of the office of the Presidency pro tempore, there will be no one during the three days' absence of the President pro tempore to execute the essential functions, formal though they be, of this office.

I have not been able to discharge my mind from the belief that there is great danger to be apprehended from the assumption of this authority by the Senate now in attempting to authorize to a single man a power which the Constitution throws alone upon the Senate as a body. Potestas delegata non potest delegari; and if there ever was a case in which the principle of that rule is to be applied it is surely in a body like this, acting under a strictly limited delegation of power.

Now, sir, whether the motion which I indicated can be at this time made, or whether its repetition would be disorderly, and therefore we must postpone the question until this report comes into the Senate and the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas can again be offered, is not perhaps so important, for the great matter is to test the sense of the Senate upon this point. Under our present condition of law, most unhappily, most unwisely, the powers of the Presidency may devolve upon the presiding officer of this body. The result is filled with confusion, and no man can pursue its consideration without feeling how involved in difficulties and contradictions the whole matter becomes. Is it wise for us, is it justifiable in us, to add further difficulties to a case already so fraught with trouble as the law of 1792 causes this case to be?

I hope, sir, that the Senate will not under the form of adopting such a rule trench upon that which is a legislative function, and which, if it is ever to be raised and considered, the co-ordinate branch of the Legislature should have an opportunity to be heard upon. Should the devolution of such powers as are contained in the executive head of this Government, equal to those of any government in the world, even be placed in question by a rule of one House of Congress? Why, sir, it seems to me that both Houses of Congress can address themselves to no more vital and important question than that. I regret exceedingly that the House of Representatives did not see fit to take action upon the measure which was presented to them and which passed the Senate at the last session. They did not. The country it appears to me seem but little alive to the importance of that measure and the necessity for changing the present condition of the laws. Here by a rule of one of the Houses of Congress alone, a rule determinable at the pleasure of that House alone, it is proposed to raise a question whether you are not attempting to delegate functions which in a certain contingency may assume the most vast importance to the people of this country.

These are things in regard to which it will not do to say that the weight of argument merely lies on one side or another. They are things in regard to which there should be no question at all. We have no right to trifle with them, or subject them to opinion or doubt. I did not say, nor do I say now, that the argument presented by me was conclusive or satisfactory. I say it was enough for me to show the Senate that questions could be raised on such a subject to make it improper for us to take action and such action as this in regard to it.

The Senator who will be designated to take the seat which you now, sir, occupy must be either what I have suggested or the mere locum tenens for the session of the duly elected President pro tempore of the body, with no power, but in his stead for convenience' sake to direct the business of the body and not attempt to exercise other functions. You, sir, would not presume to sign an enrolled bill; you would not presume to exercise the functions officially which the vote of the Senate had declared rest upon another. If that be so, and you are there for three days under the appointment, under the delegation, of the President pro tempore of the body, what becomes of the business of Congress, and what becomes of the bills that pass from the other House here and that require the signature of both presiding officers before they can pass to the Executive? Is it not palpably an arrestation of that business for three days? And what right have you to do that? It may be most vital to public and to private interests that bills shall pass from Congress promptly and receive the action of the Executive and of both branches of Congress promptly; and this unquestionably will provide, deliberately provide, that the only officer who can sign a bill can leave the Senate and leave the city and three days elapse before he returns; because if that is not so, if the power does exist, and all the functions can be transferred, then it is clear that the Senate is delegating to a single officer that power which the Constitution says they must exercise themselves as a body.

I submit to the Chair the question whether it is in order for me now to move an amendment of this third paragraph of Rule 1 by striking out "for a period not exceeding three days, unless the Senate shall otherwise order;" proposing afterward to insert, "but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment."

Mr. GARLAND. We have voted on that.

Mr. BAYARD. If that has been voted on, I suppose it can not be moved again at this stage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will answer the question of the Senator from Delaware. The Chair understands that the rule of parliamentary law which prevents the renewing in the same stage of a motion once voted down is strictly confined to motions which are literally verbatim et literatim the same. It does not affect the question of substance, but the literal use of language. The motion now suggested by the Senator from Delaware would, therefore, it seems to the Chair, be in order.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be reported.

Mr. BAYARD. If that amendment is reserved for the consideration of the Senate I shall not move it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. When the vote was taken the other day I said distinctly that I would not consider myself foreclosed from reconsidering this question in the Senate; and I suggest to the Senator from Delaware whether it would not be better to allow the first reading to be gone through with in committee and then consider the matter in the Senate. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator again on the subject.

Mr. FRYE. He has agreed to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question—on the third clause of this rule?

Mr. FRYE. I understood the Senator from Delaware to withdraw the motion with the understanding that it would be renewed in the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. With that understanding.

Mr. FRYE. Very well.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I think I can appreciate the argument of the Senator from Delaware as much as anybody in the Senate, for the reason that I some years ago contended with all the earnestness which I possessed against the power of this body to change its presiding officer because of the serious consequences which might result in the Presidential succession under the act of Congress. First, I took the ground that when a President pro tempore of the Senate was elected in the event of the Vice-President retiring or entering on the Presidential office he occupies the chair by a fixed tenure because of the very consequences to which the Senator from Delaware has alluded, and it would be eminently dangerous to confer on this body the absolute power to remove an officer upon whom in a given emergency the executive functions of this great nation were to devolve. I said that was far more dangerous than this proposition, but I met with very little support. Nothing that has since occurred, no argument that I have ever heard, has changed my mind about it.

Sir, I can not see that this clause violates the Constitution. I think it is in keeping with the spirit of the old rule. The old rule empowers the presiding officer of the Senate to designate a Senator to occupy the chair for a period not beyond an adjournment. This body has sat, within my recollection, for thirty or more hours, thirty-six hours I think, and during that period, at least under the old rule, it would be within the competency of the President pro tempore to designate a Senator to occupy the chair.

The trouble in my mind arises because if while that Senator is in the chair, no matter where the President pro tempore may be, the Senator from Delaware seems to suppose that in the event of the offices of President and Vice-President becoming vacant, the office of President would devolve upon the temporary appointee of the President pro tempore of the Senate. I can not think so.

Mr. BAYARD. My friend from Florida did not happen to be here a few days ago when this matter was discussed or he would not have asked me that question. I endeavored to distinguish between a single legislative day and the fractions of a day regarding which the law does not take notice, and the longer period beyond an adjournment, a separate and a given period of time which would be three days. I cited then the familiar maxim de minimis non curat, and said that the record of this body would disclose no change in the Presidency pro tempore of the Senate from day to day, and that for that reason, the fractions of a day not being considered, the reasonable and necessary human convenience of executing business would not require the President pro tempore of the Senate or the Vice-President, the presiding officer, to be absolutely a fixture in his chair from the opening to the close of a session. There is no such unreasonable interpretation to be given to any rule, but there is common sense to be applied, so that during the legislative day he could absent himself from time to time and from hour to hour and call another for the sake of public convenience to the chair; and that the reason why it should not continue beyond adjournment was that there were functions which he alone could execute and which his delegate could not.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The old rule provides that "the presiding officer shall have the right to name a Senator to perform the duties of the chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment." The proposed rule is that the presiding officer "shall have the right to name in open Senate, or, if absent, in writing, a Senator to perform the duties of the chair; and the Senator so designated may discharge such duties for a period not exceeding three days, unless the Senate shall otherwise order." It seems to me that this whole matter is under the control of the Senate. If I supposed for one moment that this Senator proposed to be designated here to preside over the Senate in any emergency would have a claim to the executive functions of the first office of the country under this appointment I am free to say I would not countenance such a thing; but I can not get my mind to think that this appointment provided for in this rule would change for one moment the legal character of the present President pro tempore of the Senate, so that if a vacancy occurred in the Presidential office, which this officer would be entitled to enter, notwithstanding this appointment, he would still have the right to go into it without regard to the temporary designation of a Senator for the three days to occupy the chair. Now if the necessities of the Senate and the experience of past days satisfy us that this little change is necessary, I can not see the objection to it.

That is all I have to say. I was not here the other day when the discussion was had; but with that view I can not think this rule would give to the designated Senator for one moment the right to the Presidential office, though I would not be in favor of leaving any doubt on the subject, because I think that is a matter we ought to have perfectly clear.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, it may be because I have given little consideration to the subject or it may be because I do not comprehend it very readily, but I do not really see the purpose of this proposed change in the rule. We are undertaking by it to give to the President of the Senate pro tempore a power which I suppose he is to exercise for his personal convenience. We all understand that the President pro tempore is not likely to occupy the chair for more than a very small portion of the time; the Vice-President is the officer provided by the Constitution to preside in the Senate, and he is the officer here usually, and it is only in very rare instances, exceptions, that there is any President pro tempore chosen at all. Now, if we are to delegate to a President pro tempore the power to create a presiding officer here for one, two, or three days, or any length of time, for his personal convenience, why should we not extend the same power to the Vice-President? He certainly is much more likely to need the personal convenience, and I really do not understand why we undertake to make this provision for the benefit of a President pro tempore and not for the regular presiding officer of the Senate.

Mr. LAPHAM. Let me suggest to the Senator the constitutional provision in regard to the Vice-President——

Mr. BLAIR. In express terms——

Mr. LAPHAM. In his absence we have to elect a President pro tempore.

Mr. BLAIR. Assume that to be so, that in his absence we are to elect a President pro tempore, is there any more difficulty in electing one in the absence of the President pro tempore himself to preside until the President pro tempore returns?

Mr. LAPHAM. We reserve that right in this rule as proposed.

Mr. BLAIR. We reserve that right, to be sure; we may make the election; but is there really any great consequence at all in the thing?

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, it was only during the last days of the convention which framed the Constitution that the office of Vice-President was considered at all, and after it was determined to have a Vice-President elected the duty of presiding over the Senate was assigned to him, there being otherwise nothing for him to attend to unless the President should be removed or die or resign. The Constitution reads:

> The Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote, unless they be equally divided.
> The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President, or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States.

The Senate chooses a President of the Senate pro tempore. Is it a function of the President pro tempore as provided by the Constitution to designate some one to fill his office in his absence? I concede that in the absence of a presiding officer for a few minutes or for a short time he has the right to call some one to the chair to preside until he shall return; but I insist that it has never been the practice, it was not at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and it has not been since, to extend that beyond an adjournment. Here is a change in the rule which has been in force some sixty years, conferring upon the President of the Senate the power to designate for three days his successor when he is absent. It is true the rule goes on to say, as proposed, "unless the Senate shall otherwise order," but practically it is a departure from the theory upon which the right depends of calling one to preside during the absence of the regular presiding officer; and that is where, by necessity, for a temporary or momentary absence, the presiding officer has to leave the Chamber, then he designates, by unanimous consent, some one to sit in the chair until he returns. Certainly that does not apply to three days, and if you can break over that rule of calling one to the chair temporarily until an adjournment and allow some one to preside for three days under a temporary designation, you can for thirty, for forty; and the whole theory of that, it seems to me, is false. I can see no reason why the rule as it has always been should be departed from; therefore I am opposed to the third clause, and hope it will be voted down.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] who replied to my suggestion by saying that the Constitution makes a provision in reference to the Vice-President which does not apply to the President pro tempore. Under the rule itself, the original rule, the first one on the second page, the Vice-President was expressly given the power of substitution, not extending to be sure beyond an adjournment, but he was given the power to designate a Senator to preside in his absence. That would seem to be a concession that the Vice-President always has had that power for a limited period of time, not extending beyond an adjournment. I raise the question again, if now we are to make this provision for any length of time as a matter of convenience to the President pro tempore, why is it not made with reference to the Vice-President himself?

In regard to the Senator's main proposition, that the Constitution requires us to choose a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President, I do not suppose he will contend that that is a mere temporary absence. It is such an absence as becomes permanent, when the office is practically vacant; then we are to proceed to choose a President pro tempore in precisely the same way as if the office of the President himself were vacant, he being absent by reason of sickness, death, inability, or what not, then under the Constitution and according to law measures would be taken to fill that high office. So I do not see that the suggestion of the Senator from New York meets the objection which I made at all.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Am I to understand that the effect of the adoption of this rule would be to give to the President pro tempore of the Senate a power which under the Constitution the Vice-President presiding over the body would not possess? Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not say "under the Constitution," but I say that under the rule it is proposed to give the President pro tempore power to appoint a presiding officer over this body for three days, while for the Vice-President himself, who hitherto has possessed the right to designate a Senator to preside not beyond an adjournment, no such provision is made for his convenience. Why should there not be? The Vice-President is the man usually here, and it is proposed by this addition to the rules to provide for the convenience of a President pro tempore, and leave the Vice-President, who is generally here, entirely out in the cold.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is what I understood the Senator to say, that the Constitution restricts the power of the Vice-President in designating a Senator to preside——

Mr. BLAIR. I do not say that. The Senator from New York, in reply to my suggestion, said that the Constitution compels us to choose a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President; and yet here is our rule, adopted in 1820 and practiced upon ever since, which gives to the Vice-President the power to make a substitution for a limited period of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the third clause of the first rule.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to say just a word in relation to this matter. I think that the committee considered the convenience of the presiding officer and the convenience of the Senators in this modification or change of the rule. I speak for myself alone when I say that I can not see how by any possibility it touches the question of the Presidential succession, nor can I see how by any possibility it raises any constitutional question. As to the Vice-President of the United States, the Constitution says that in his absence we shall elect a President pro tempore. We have no authority, under the Constitution, to say for the Vice-President what we have said by this rule for the President pro tempore; nor is there the slightest necessity, because if he absents himself for a day, then, under the Constitution, we proceed at once, are compelled to proceed at once, to provide a President pro tempore, who at any time in the absence of the Vice-President can preside over this body. Under general, common, well-settled parliamentary law the Vice-President may, without a word being said touching it, substitute a presiding officer in his place for the time being, for the ten minutes, fifteen minutes, or twenty minutes; and, of course, when the Constitution says "absent" it does not refer to an absence for an hour or a half-hour, and we in our rule are silent in relation to that. But as to the President of the Senate pro tempore we are just now placed where the stringency of the rule is an affliction, and it is seen to be an affliction every day.

Why, Mr. President, since I have been in the Senate—less than three years—three solid days have been spent in the discussion of this very question, as to whether or not the presiding officer should have the power to appoint a man, he being outside of the Senate and away from it; and it has been discussed again and again in the United States Senate.

Now it seems to me that it simply resolves itself into this question: Under the circumstances, there being no Vice-President of the United States, the President pro tempore of the Senate being necessarily presiding officer of this body for nearly the next two years, shall that presiding officer have an opportunity in case of a day's sickness, in case of a two days' absence, to be relieved without the United States Senate being compelled to elect a President pro tempore and oust him from the place where we have put him? Why, sir, with the rule as it stands now, if the presiding officer of the Senate is too sick to come to the Senate Chamber, the first thing in the morning under the presidency of the Secretary of the Senate we must elect a President pro tempore; there is no choice left; and that President pro tempore of the Senate is then clothed with all the powers the Constitution clothes the President pro tempore with to-day. If the next day that Senator is sick and can not come up here to the Senate Chamber and appoint from his place orally some one to take that chair for an hour or two hours, then the Senate of the United States must proceed again to an election of President pro tempore, and so on.

I admit, Mr. President, that in times past the inconvenience and trouble of this have not been seen so much, because as a rule, probably for nine years out of every ten, there has been a Vice-President of the United States, and we have relieved him, when he has made a day's absence for the purpose, by electing a President pro tempore.

Mr. MAXEY. Allow me to interrupt the Senator. I am endeavoring to follow the chairman of the Committee on Rules very closely. I understand his argument is that the powers of the Vice-President of the United States as presiding officer of the Senate being fixed by the Constitution, we have no right to add on or to subtract therefrom. Then he assumes, if I understand the argument, that we have no choice when it comes to an election of President pro tempore of the Senate and can confer on him no powers over and above those which the Vice-President is authorized by the Constitution to exercise. Can we give a President pro tempore of the Senate, who is a mere substitute for the Vice-President in case of his absence or when he performs the duties of President—can we give him any other greater or higher authority than the Constitution gives to the Vice-President?

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator from Maine also, while he is considering this, is not every argument of inconvenience that he suggested in the case of the absence of the President pro tempore equally strong in the case of the absence of the Vice-President?

Mr. FRYE. I will answer the last question first. Certainly not, because the Vice-President of the United States, for the very purpose of giving the United States Senate an opportunity to have a presiding officer in case of his absence, absents himself for a day, and the Senate proceeds to elect a President pro tempore, who in the absence of the Vice-President does preside.

Mr. BAYARD. If he were absent from any cause at the time of meeting of the Senate, would it not be our duty then to elect just as we would in the case of the absence of our President pro tempore? What is the difference? The Constitution provides that the presiding officer of this body shall be the Vice-President of the United States, and if on any day that Vice-President is absent he can not nominate his locum tenens, he can not nominate his substitute; the Senate must elect one; and then if the Vice-President comes back again that Senator is pro tanto out of office. I remember when we, following the usual convenience of having a President pro tempore in order to prevent a failure of succession to the office of the Presidency, had chosen one, there was a doubt whether Mr. Henry Wilson did not even by his presence in the gallery, coming into the Senate Chamber, being really within its four walls, vacate the election we had made the day before of a President pro tempore to fill his place. So the very argument of convenience growing out of the accidental absence of the President pro tempore from the chair when without the Senate applies with equal force to the absence of the Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. FRYE. Now, Mr. President, I understand that it is entirely competent for the United States Senate to elect to-day ten gentlemen, ten Senators, if it pleases, and give them another name than President pro tempore of the Senate, and that those gentlemen in the absence of the President pro tempore could preside over the Senate. I believe that the President pro tempore of the Senate can under authority of the United States Senate put a man in his place to perform the duties of the chair for a month. I fail to see the slightest difference between doing it for one day or one hour and two days, and I call the Senator's attention to this: The Speaker of the House of Representatives under certain contingencies may be called to perform the duties of President of the United States, and yet the Senator has seen the House of Representatives put a man in the place of the Speaker of the House of Representatives to preside for more than one day or two days or three days.

Mr. BAYARD. Did the Speaker do so or the House?

Mr. FRYE. The Speaker did it; and under the existing rules in the House of Representatives the Speaker himself in case of illness may appoint some one to perform the duties of the chair for a time not exceeding ten days; and yet that Speaker of that House may be a successor to the President of the United States, and I never heard of the slightest inconvenience. I never heard the question raised when the rules were under discussion in that House in relation to that matter that it was not within the power of the Speaker to designate some one under that rule to perform the duties of the chair for ten days.

I say, Mr. President, what I said when I rose to my feet and nothing more, that in my judgment the committee in this rule simply consulted the convenience of the Senate and the presiding officer; and I say further, that to-morrow and next day (two days) the Senator from Massachusetts will preside in this body in place of the President pro tempore by unanimous consent of the United States Senate. Now, does the Senator from Delaware maintain for a moment that if the President of the United States should die to-morrow Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, would not be President pro tempore of the Senate?

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator is begging the question, it seems to me, when he speaks of the unanimous consent of the Senate, for that, I apprehend, would cure all defects in regard to our action.

Mr. FRYE. If there is any difficulty with the Constitution of the United States, or any conflict with it, unanimous consent, of course, would not cure that.

Mr. BAYARD. Unanimous consent may do many things here.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, one word more. I have learned that when I have a matter in my charge the more talking I do the more delay I cause and the more speeches I am liable to provoke; and therefore my rule is when I have a matter in charge to do just as little talking as it is possible for me to do. Now, I understand in the open Senate out of committee this whole question is to be met once more. This amendment which has been offered here by the Senator from Arkansas will be offered again, and in the full Senate ample debate can be had upon the proposition and will be had. I hope, therefore, that the Senators will now not insist upon the yeas and nays upon this third clause, but will allow the vote pro forma to be for the clause, and allow us to proceed with the consideration of the next rule, and before a great while I shall consent that there may be an adjournment.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator has not answered the question I put.

Mr. FRYE. I beg pardon.

Mr. MAXEY. He followed off the question interjected by the Senator from Delaware, and did not answer mine. That question was whether or not we have power to confer on the President pro tempore of the Senate other and higher powers than those conferred by the Constitution on the Vice-President, and if we have no such authority how we can pass this rule.

Mr. FRYE. I will answer that by saying that I have not the slightest question on earth that we have full and ample power to clothe the President pro tempore of the Senate with power to substitute some one in his place to perform the duties of the chair one hour, or one day, or three days, or ten days, or twenty.

Mr. MAXEY. If he is a constitutional officer just as much as the Vice-President I do not see why the same reasoning the Senator adopts as to the Vice-President does not apply to him, that we can not add to his authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the third clause of the first rule. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. FRYE. I asked that pro forma this clause might be considered adopted, because in a full Senate we are to have the amendment offered again. I did not suppose any Senator under the circumstances would object to that, and let us proceed. If it is objected to, and if the decision of the Chair is to be that the noes have it, then as a matter of course I shall demand the yeas and nays, and I do not like to take the yeas and nays now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Maine that it is a mere question of the form of stating the question in the Senate. When the Committee of the Whole reports to the Senate it reports simply a proposition to strike out this third clause, and that can be amended in the Senate, if the Senate see fit, before the vote on that proposition is taken. On the other hand, if it is adopted, it can be reached by a motion there to strike out; so that it is of very little practical importance.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know that it is; but I think I had better ask for the yeas and nays on the last clause; and pending the taking of the yeas and nays, at the request of several Senators, I shall move that the Senate now adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRYE. I now move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY December 19, 1883.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. ELIAS DE WITT HUNTLEY.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved, containing the following entry of an occurrence which took place while the doors were closed yesterday, viz:

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore notified the Senate of his intention of being absent from the Senate for the next two succeeding days, and asked unanimous consent for leave to designate a Senator to perform the duties of the chair during such temporary absence, which was granted.

"Whereupon

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore designated Mr. GEORGE F. HOAR, a Senator from the State of Massachusetts, to perform the duties of the chair during his absence."

COAST SURVEY REPORT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with section 4690 of the Revised Statutes, a report of Professor J. E. Hilgard, Superintendent United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, showing the progress made in that work during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Memorial to Congress in relation to sheer-booms at bridges on the Mississippi River.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota respectfully represents:

That the piers of many of the railway bridges crossing the Mississippi River are a very serious hinderance to navigation. The steamers frequently collide with them, and sometimes great loss of life is thereby occasioned, and that there is annually a great loss of property, and that they are constantly a great source of danger and dread to those who have business or who travel upon the river.

That in accordance with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, a board of United States engineers was convened in Saint Louis, and after an exhaustive examination of the subject they submitted a report to the honorable the Secretary of War February 19, 1877, in which they recognized the great necessity for sheer-booms and recommended plans for the same at the various bridges.

That in 1882 Maj. A. Mackenzie, United States engineer in charge of the river improvements between Saint Anthony's Falls and the mouth of the Illinois River, constantly witnessing the great danger to life and property at the bridge piers and the consequent necessity for protection thereat, submitted a report to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, in which much important information was given upon the subject, and the sheer-booms urgently recommended. Therefore, your memorialists would respectfully but urgently suggest that the interest of commerce, the security of property, and the safety of life imperatively demand that, at the earliest possible moment, sheer-booms be placed at the various bridges in substantial accordance with the plans and recommendations above alluded to.

Be it resolved (the assembly concurring), That the governor be, and he is hereby, requested to subscribe and forward the memorial to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have quite a number of memorials from the Legislature of Minnesota, and I suggest that their reading be omitted, and that they be inserted in the RECORD without reading, to save time.

Memorial to the House of Representatives.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, would respectfully but urgently represent:

That Big Stone Lake, which is but an enlargement of the Minnesota River and Lake Traverse, but five miles distant therefrom, and which discharges its waters by the way of the Bois de Sioux River into the Red River of the North at Breckinridge, are each about thirty-five miles long, with a width of from one and a half to two miles, and so situated in the great valley which extends from the northern boundary of the State to the mouth of the Minnesota River that by embracing them in the "reservoir system" now being prosecuted by the Government in this State the excess of waters caused by the annual and disastrous spring floods in that region could be permanently restrained and so utilized as to render the Minnesota River navigable throughout its length, and also extend the navigation of the Red River of the North southward about one hundred miles to the foot of said Big Stone Lake.

That the preliminary surveys have shown the entire practicability of the project above foreshadowed, and at a comparatively small cost, while its immense advantages to the people of Western Minnesota and Eastern Dakota are too obvious to need repetition.

Wherefore your memorialists respectfully urge upon Congress that you take such speedy and prompt action as will result in accomplishing the objects herein set forth.

L. FLETCHER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

President of the Senate.

A memorial to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, respectfully represent that further and more liberal appropriations are urgently demanded for the immediate improvement of the harbor of Duluth.

The expansion of the commerce tributary to that point has been so manifestly and largely out of proportion to the extension of harbor facilities that a further failure to augment the appropriations must result in the obstruction of such commerce or its diversion to unnatural and less economical channels.

The water front in said harbor, so improved as to be presently available for commerce, is not at all commensurate to the variety and magnitude of the shipping interests which are now definitely seeking accommodation at that port.

Wherefore your memorialists pray for an immediate and substantial increase of the appropriations for that harbor.

President of the Senate.

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

A memorial to Congress asking an appropriation for the construction of a light-house at Grand Marais, on Lake Superior.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Minnnesota, respectfully represent that the necessity for a harbor of refuge upon the north shore of Lake Superior has been heretofore recognized by your honorable body by appropriations which have been made for the partial improvement of such a harbor at Grand Marais; that the constantly increasing commerce of the lake demands that such improvements be pushed to early completion. Your memorialists therefore pray that such further and adequate appropriations may be promptly made as will insure a commodious harbor of refuge at Grand Marais, together with a light-house, without which the improvements already made will be of little value.

He also presented a memorial from the Legislature of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A memorial to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled.

Your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Minnesota, most respectfully represent that

Whereas, under and by the laws of the State of Minnesota, a judgment is a lien on real estate only upon and after the docketing of such judgment in the county in which such real estate lies; and

Whereas the courts of the United States in this State have held that the aforesaid provision of law is inapplicable to judgments rendered by the United States courts, and that such judgment when docketed in the office of the clerk of such courts becomes a lien on all real estate in any and every county in the State without the docketing of such judgments in the county in which such real estate lies; and

Whereas the existence of different rules in the same State as to the liens of judgments is misleading to the public, and the making of a judgment a lien on any real estate in any county in which such judgment is not docketed is a great and manifest hardship and inconvenience: Therefore, your memorialists respectfully and earnestly pray that a law be enacted by Congress making the laws of the United States conform to the laws of the State in the respect aforesaid.

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to use their influence to secure the passage of such a law.

Resolved further, The secretary of state is hereby directed to send an authenticated copy of this memorial to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A joint resolution, asking immediate adjustment of land grants to railroads in this State.

Whereas millions of acres of land in this State have been granted to railroads and have been withdrawn from settlement and are untaxed; and

Whereas many such grants have not been adjusted, and lands not falling within the grant are thus withheld from market or are untaxed; and

Whereas some of such grants have been forfeited by reason of non-compliance on part of the railroad company to which the grant has been made with intentions of the grant; and

Whereas it requires an act of Congress or the decree of a court to forfeit the land of a defaulting railroad company: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, That the interest of the State and of the citizens requires that all land grants to railroads should be adjusted at the earliest possible day, or that in all cases when any railroad company has not complied with the conditions of the grant to it, such grant should be at once declared forfeited.

Resolved further, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to use all honorable means to secure an immediate adjustment of such grants, or an immediate forfeiture of any grant the terms of which have not been complied with.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. INGALLS. I report from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with the recommendation that it do pass without amendment, the bill (S. 616) to establish a standard of time in the District of Columbia, and after the conclusion of the morning business I will ask that the bill may be considered to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 26) granting permission to Ensign L. K. Reynolds, United States Navy, to accept the decoration of the Royal and Imperial Order of Francis Joseph from the Government of Austria, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 47) for the relief of Frances E. Stewart, administratrix of Michael S. Stewart, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 12) for the relief of Elizabeth Carson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

GEORGE A. CLARKE AND W. H. H. ST. JOHN.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution for the payment of $720 to the mother of George A. Clarke and $600 to the widow of W. H. H. St. John, to report the resolution without amendment; and I should like to have it placed immediately upon its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be first read, so that we may understand what it is.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mrs. Mary V. Quin, mother of George A. Clarke, deceased, late messenger in charge of the room of the Official Reporter of the Senate, the sum of $720, being an amount equal to six months' salary as messenger aforesaid; and to the widow of W. H. H. St. John, late messenger in charge of store-room, the sum of $600, being an amount equal to six months' salary as messenger aforesaid; the above sums to be considered as including the funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I wish to explain that the persons for whom the relief is provided come within the rule adopted by the Senate to give six months' pay, which shall be in lieu of funeral expenses and all other allowances, in case of death of officers in the employ of the Senate. These officers died since the last session of Congress, and the resolution allows six months' pay, which includes funeral expenses and all other allowances, to each of the parties named. They were in the employ of the Senate at the time they died.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am also directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 31) to pay the employés of the two Houses of Congress their salaries for the current month on the 20th instant, to report it with an amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I call attention to the fact that the committee recommend an amendment making the time of payment the 22d instead of the 20th instant, it being found to be impossible to make payment on the 20th on account of the changes of the officers here. The joint resolution was changed so as to require the payment to be made on the 22d instant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the last line of the joint resolution, after the word "the," it is proposed to strike out the word "20th" and to insert the word "22d;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay the employés of the two Houses of Congress their salaries for the current month on the 22d inst.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to pay the employés of the two Houses of Congress their salaries for the current month on the 22d instant."

Resolved, That five hundred copies of the report of the commissioner of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company be printed for the use of the commissioner.

I wish merely to say that this is a House document now in print; but the Committee on Printing of the House not having yet been appointed, it is impossible to act upon the matter there, and it would be well to have these five hundred copies struck off now while the document is in type. Therefore I commend the resolution to the consideration of the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution, the Chair hearing no objection to its present consideration.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDEMNITY RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas at its December term, in the year 1875, in a decision rendered in the case of the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company vs. The United States, the Supreme Court of the United States construed the indemnity clause found in the grant made by Congress in aid of said road, and held that under such a grant indemnity lands are allowed in lieu only of lands originally included in the grant, but which are afterwards sold or disposed of by the United States between the date of the grant and the date when the granted lands become identified by the definite location of the line of the road; and

Whereas on the 5th day of June, 1880, Attorney-General Devens, to whom the question had been referred by Hon. Carl Schurz, then Secretary of the Interior, rendered an opinion, in which, referring to the language of the Supreme Court in the above-named case in regard to the indemnity authorized by grant under consideration, he stated that in the circuit court for the district of Wisconsin, in 1879, Justice Harlan had expressed different views from those announced by the Supreme Court of the United States, and held that under a grant similar to that involved in the case of the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company vs. The United States indemnity lands are allowed in lieu of lands disposed of by the United States either before or after the date of the grant, and therefore advised the Secretary of the Interior to return to the practice which had prevailed in his Department prior to the above-mentioned decision of the Supreme Court, and award indemnity lands to railroad companies in lieu of lands otherwise disposed of by the United States, either before or after the dates of their respective grants; and

Whereas Secretary Schurz, on the 16th of October, 1880, accepted the opinion of Attorney-General Devens, and directed the Commissioner of the General Land Office to be governed thereby in the certification of indemnity lands to railroad companies instead of being governed by the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to inform the Senate how much land has been certified or patented for the benefit of railroad companies since the date of the above-named decision of the Supreme Court of the United States as indemnity for lands sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States prior to the dates of the respective grants, and in aid of what roads such patents or certified lists have been issued or are intended to be issued, and that he further inform the Senate whether the order of his predecessor directing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to be governed by the opinion of the Attorney-General and the alleged decision of the United States circuit court for the district of Wisconsin rather than by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is still in force in his Department.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the present consideration of this resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it lie over and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. INGALLS. I offer the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, the 20th day of December 1883, they stand adjourned till 12 o'clock meridian on Thursday, the 3d day of January, 1884.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir; let it lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. In order that the Senate may consider it in connection with the resolution, I move to amend by striking out "Thursday the 3d of January" and inserting "Monday the 7th of January."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will hear the notice of the Senator from Tennessee that the motion will be made when the resolution is before the Senate. The morning business is now concluded, and there is no business before the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. THOMAS O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. 31) authorizing the payment of the salaries of the employés of the two Houses of Congress on the 22d instant.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A subsequent message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. TOWLES, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a resolution that when the two Houses adjourn on Monday, December 24, 1883, they stand adjourned until Thursday, the 3d day of January, 1884; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. FRYE. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules, which is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FRYE. As clause third——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will first report the pending question.

Mr. FRYE. If the President pleases, there will be no pending question on clause third of Rule 1, as I propose to withdraw my demand for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. The demand may be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the order of the Senate for the yeas and nays can be rescinded. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRYE. I do that because the same subject has to be considered in the Senate, and it is a mere waste of time to be going over it twice.

Mr. INGALLS. The third clause, then, of the first rule stands disagreed to by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The demand for the yeas and nays having been withdrawn, the noes have it on the question of the adoption of the third clause of the first rule. The second proposed rule will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE II.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The Senate may elect a Secretary, a Chief Clerk, a Principal Executive Clerk, a Chaplain, a Sergeant-at-Arms, and an Assistant Doorkeeper, to continue in office until their successors are chosen and qualified; each of whom shall take and subscribe the oaths prescribed by law before entering upon the duties of his office, the Secretary of the Senate in open Senate, the other officers in the office of the Secretary. The Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms shall each appoint all the employés of his department, unless otherwise directed.

Mr. FRYE. This is a new rule, but it simply formulates a custom of the Senate into a rule, the same officers having hitherto been elected without law or rule.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like the chairman of the committee to give some reason that moved the committee to offer this innovation. It is apparent that it is a new rule, as stated by the Senator who has charge of the report, and I have been examining it with a view of ascertaining what could have been the reason for it. I am not in favor of the rule as it is presented, but still if I could hear the reason that prompted the committee I might change my mind in the matter, and possibly would not care to detain the Senate by giving my reason against it.

Mr. FRYE. It was not regarded by the committee as a matter of any special importance, but in looking over the organization of the Senate, the election of a President pro tempore, the administration of the oaths, &c., in order to preserve some proper order of proceedings, finding that these officers had always been elected, or elected at any rate for a long time, and that there was no rule touching the matter and that there was no law touching it, it was thought better on the whole to adopt this as a rule. Of course it is not a matter of any great importance any way, because a resolution can do it at any time.

Mr. GARLAND. Now, Mr. President, looking at this in its practical operation, I much prefer that the subject should remain just as it is, in the hands of the Senate at all times, to be brought up by a resolution or motion to elect the officers that may be deemed proper and necessary for the execution of the business of the Senate; and I believe it is right that it should not be fixed by any standing rule or by any statute.

It is a little curious to consider that if a person would ask you what officers the Senate by law is entitled to you could not tell him. The Revised Statutes mention that "the following officers are employed by the Senate at the following salaries." There is no rule saying what officers we shall have, and I think upon examination it is for a very good reason. It is left to the Senate to determine what officers it needs, what officers it may possibly need, so as not to be tied down to the compulsory election of certain classes of officers whether or no; so that at any time if a Senator thinks we are in need of another officer he may offer a resolution to that effect, or whenever we want to change our officers a resolution is offered, as for example by the Senator from Ohio

[Mr. SHERMAN], that a certain officer be elected, or that certain officers be elected by the Senate.

For one I honestly want to come back to the custom that as I have been informed did once prevail in the Senate, of continuing the officers of the Senate unless they should be removed for cause. At every new Congress, when the composition of the Senate is partly changed, we are asked to elect officers, it does not matter which party is in power; we may preach and talk as much as we please about civil-service reform, but when the time comes the party that is in power seeks to change the officers of the Senate. I want the time to come when we shall stop this practice, and not fix a rule that the Senate may elect, because we know by what kind of interpretation it is so often said that "may" means "shall," and is so interpreted. I would leave it with the Senate to continue its officers and to change them when it saw proper, and not have a standing rule that it may do this thing, that, or the other.

I believe there is nothing so essential, as is preached here every two years by the abstract doctrines of Senators, as good and efficient officers for the enforcement of the order of the Senate and for the proper enforcement and execution of its business.

There was once an old rule on this subject, Rule 49, and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to how summarily it was dispensed with on a short speech made by Mr. Benton on February 9, 1849. I will ask the Secretary to read what I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MR. BENTON. Experience has satisfied me and many other Senators that it would be advantageous to us to have no periodical elections for our higher officers. The workings of the system have satisfactorily proved this to my own mind and the minds of other Senators. These officers are always in our hands, and we can at any time discharge them for the non-performance or unfaithful discharge of their duties. They are always in our hands, sir, and we can discharge them at once for any delinquency of duty; therefore there is no need of these changes at every session. And being called upon for reasons for the introduction of this resolution, I will go further and say that I have come to the stern determination to discountenance everybody who comes in to apply for any of these offices and seeks to undermine the incumbents; and that I believe it is now a matter of fact that there are persons who have such an immensity of leisure upon their hands as to be actually working at this time—a year in advance—for these offices. Now it is not right that officers engaged in the performance of their duties should be harassed by knowing that persons are attempting to undermine them and trying to get away their places during their whole term of office. While this rule continues in force all the officers of the Senate who are affected by it, from the highest to the lowest, are continually subject to these annoyances; for, sir, among those who have violent inclinations for office there are many who will begin at the top, at the highest office, and come all the way down, until they get to the last one, like a wounded squirrel falling from the top of a tree, catching and struggling at every limb, till at length his last support fails him, and he rolls upon the ground. Thus we have seen it for a long time, and Senators have been overwhelmed by the importunities of these office-seekers, who will take no denial, but return again and again with their application. Under the old rule Senators were not troubled with these applications, but from the moment we adopted the rule now in force we found that there was a concentration of all the rejected applicants—and, God knows, their name was legion—upon the Senate for places. Now, sir, I hope the Senate of the United States will be kept free from applications for office and from these periodical changes in its offices. I have been against it from the beginning, and I brought in the resolution from seeing the evils of the system and with the hope that the Senate, by abolishing the rule, will free its members from the importunities of these applicants and its officers from the anxieties occasioned by the consciousness that there are legions of office-seekers endeavoring to undermine them, and that we will retain in our own hands, as we have the full right to do, the power of discharging an incompetent officer on any occasion.—Congressional Globe, second session Thirtieth Congress, page 490.

Mr. GARLAND. These remarks of Mr. Benton were upon a resolution of his to repeal the then existing forty-ninth rule, providing for a biennial election of a Secretary and a Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and on the conclusion of this brief speech the resolution repealing the old rule was "considered by unanimous consent and agreed to" without a division. These remarks of Mr. Benton have been fully verified and emphasized and proved in all succeeding time to the present date. I think it is much better, as we now have no rule on the subject, to leave this matter, in Mr. Benton's language, in the hands of the Senate to deal with as occasion may require. If we want faithful and efficient officers of this body, let us keep them when they are so, as it is the habit of the States, at least those States that are long settled, to keep their old sheriffs and their old clerks where they are faithful, it matters not to what political organization they may belong.

Here is an opportunity to start this matter in the right direction; and I do not agree with the Senator from Maine that it is proper and judicious to enact a rule on this subject, but we should leave it in the hands of the Senate, in the language that Mr. Benton uses in the remarks that I have had read from the Secretary's desk. For that reason I shall oppose the adoption of this proposed rule.

Mr. FRYE. Only one word, Mr. President. This rule leaves it entirely in the hands of the Senate. If the Senate will observe the language, it is "may elect," and "to continue in office until their successors are chosen and qualified." We have just elected officers. Suppose this rule is adopted; there will be nothing in the rule which should demand, and I can not see anything in the rule which should encourage, the other side of the Chamber if in two or three years from now they are in the majority of this body to proceed to another election.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Maine will allow me to ask, is there any reason why to-morrow the Senate may not displace any one of the newly-elected officers and elect a successor and qualify him?

Mr. FRYE. I understand there is none.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the Senate parted with a particle of its power over the question if this rule shall be adopted?

Mr. FRYE. I do not understand so.

Mr. GARLAND. That has nothing to do with the proposition I made. I stated emphatically that in the great legerdemain of interpretation, if you put in "may" and say that the Senate may do this, it is nothing more nor less than as was said by Mr. Benton, a standing invitation to all persons who want these offices to electioneer for them, and you will find that the Senate soon begins to interpret "may" to mean "shall," and it soon becomes, instead of a mere permissive rule, one of absolute compulsion according to the construction of the Senate. As we have worked so long and so well without any rule on the subject, why not leave it in the hands of the Senate so that they may control it by a mere resolution at any time they see proper.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this rule appears to be merely a reenactment or a declaration of the constitutional power of the Senate on this subject. The language of the Constitution is that the Senate "shall choose" their "other officers." We have even under parliamentary law, without any declaration in the Constitution, I suppose, and certainly without the formulation of any rule, the power absolutely over this subject. I can not understand precisely why the committee proposed to interpolate this among the rules of the Senate, unless it might be that they wished to show what it was the desire of the Senate should be done under that constitutional provision, because the constitutional provision is absolute. I suppose if technically interpreted the Senate would be compelled to choose all its officers, even down to a page and to the messengers in the subterranean cavern beneath the Capitol. But we have by this rule, if adopted, delegated to the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms the appointment of all employés unless otherwise provided. I can see no reason specially why the rule should be adopted, unless it may be to designate what particular officers the Senate shall choose under the constitutional provision.

So far as concerns the custom to which the Senator from Arkansas has referred, of retaining faithful officers for a long period of time, I agree with him fully, and I wish the old traditions and the old spirit of the Senate might be carried out. I believe the spectacle of continual changes in the official staff when the officers have properly and impartially performed their duties is a revolting one, and I hope that if this rule stands in the way of that observance (which I do not see that it does) it may not be adopted; otherwise I can see no reason why it should not be.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I agree with much that has been said by the Senator from Kansas, that there would be inherently, independent of the constitutional suggestion, in a parliamentary body ex necessitate the power to change its officers and provide proper machinery for the transaction of its business. I have no doubt about that. But I think this rule is entirely superfluous, and I think it has this objection, which I submit to the consideration of the Senate, that it is suggestive that changes ought to be made. There is no necessity for creating new machinery. We had an instance yesterday of how easily the machinery works and how, without any additional lubrication, tried and trusted and proved officers can be displaced for others. There is no necessity therefore for the rule.

But I wish very much, sir, that while there is no rule upon the subject, that which was the unwritten law of this body and which prevailed for many years, greatly to the advancement of public business and to the reputation of the body, should continue to prevail. In 1879, after an interval of nearly twenty years, the Democratic party was found to have a majority of members in this Chamber. In the twenty years there had been a most diligent process of winnowing from out of the public service every man who could be suspected of sympathy or affiliation with the doctrines of that party. In the executive branch and all its departments, in the House of Representatives, and here in the Senate the same rule had prevailed, and Democrats were exceedingly scarce holding office of any kind in the executive, legislative, or judicial departments under the authority of the United States. Perhaps it was a natural order of things. When therefore the Senate passed into their hands there was a more than usual demand and pressure that the few places to which they could by any means be made successfully eligible should be filled in some degree by them. I appreciated that feeling, but I did not fully agree with the majority of my political brethren in this body on that subject. I believed then that where there had been able, courteous, honest, efficient employés of this body, they ought not to be discharged because the accident, the ebb and flow, of political power had brought a majority of Democrats on this floor. One result of my efforts and those of others associated with me was testified by the retention in the service of the Senate of a number of amiable and excellent gentlemen, some of whom remain here yet. There was no such thing as a "clean sweep;" and the fact remains before the country undenied and undeniable that yesterday morning before these removals commenced a majority in number of the official force of the Senate were of persons holding opposite political opinions to the Democrats of the Senate, and not only a majority in number of mere numerical force, but, if you choose to descend to a still lower particular, a majority in the amount of salaries which they drew.

In 1879, however, when there was a proposition for change, I would say to the Senate that there was justification for that change. We wished to remove the Secretary of the Senate because the Secretary of the Senate had been the aggressive, violent, denunciatory opponent of more than one-half of the members of this Chamber and the party to which they belonged, both in public and in private. He had made his office the center of active, aggressive campaigning, in which the motives and the character and the objects of the Democratic majority were aspersed most unjustifiably and improperly; and I believe, placing that matter fairly and squarely before the self-respect of the Senate, they were entitled to have at least some one holding that office and exercising its powers who did not consider and treat and publish them as revolutionists, in whose hands the public power of this Government would not be safe. It was perfectly justified.

Without meaning to speak unkindly of any one who was then displaced, I do mean to say there was no displacement in my judgment but what was for the benefit of the public service so far as efficiency and ability were concerned. "Comparisons are odious;" the events are past; I would not wish to reflect unkindly personally on any one who then held office; but I do mean to say that there was an active and actual reform practically in the changes then made.

But let us see something of the doctrine which was professed at that time on both sides of the Chamber and which I wish to have in some degree recognized now. On the 18th of April, 1879, the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] not now in his seat offered the following resolution on this subject:

That, in the opinion of the Senate, the correct and safe transaction of the business of the Senate is materially dependent on retaining in its service a corps of experienced, well-trained, and diligent officers, and this can only be done by security in their respective positions so long as they continue faithful in the discharge of their duties.

That was the declaration proposed by the honorable Senator from Vermont to which he invited the approval of the Senate. On the 25th of April, after certain discussions, there was a modification of that resolution adopted by the Democratic majority, on a vote of 33 yeas to 26 nays, in this form:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the correct and safe transaction of the business of the Senate is materially dependent on retaining in its service a corps of experienced, well-trained, and diligent officers, and this can only be done by security in their respective positions so long as they continue faithful in the discharge of their duties and acceptable to a majority of the Senators.

And inasmuch as the appointment of the subordinates and the power of dismissal should remain with those officers respectively who must be responsible for all the service committed to their charge: Therefore,

Resolved, That the standing order of the Senate regulating the appointment and removal of clerks and other employés of the Senate be, and it is hereby, amended by striking out all of the same after the word "respectively," in the third line, so that the same shall read as follows:

"Resolved, That the several officers and others in the departments of the Secretary of the Senate and of the Sergeant-at-Arms shall be appointed and removed from office by those officers respectively."

I fail, between the resolutions of the honorable Senator from Vermont speaking I suppose for his party in the Senate and the resolutions adopted by the Democratic majority at that time, to see any material difference, because the declaration that their tenure of office should depend on their acceptability to a majority of the Senate was adding no new feature whatever. I believe, sir, that the proposition stated by either one of these resolutions or by both is true, that the facility of public business can only be attained by allowing well-trained men of approved character to continue during good behavior in the offices attached to this body. Upon that doctrine I have not simply spoken, but I have voted and acted, and I again say that no diligent, able officer of this body ever quitted his place by my vote or with my consent. I have not moved to push one man out in order to push another in. I agree with the Senator from Arkansas in believing that this proposed new rule is not only entirely superfluous, but perhaps I may go further when I speak my own opinion and say it is suggestive of that which I think is to be regretted, and that is changes except for cause.

Mr. President, I do not think this is the occasion for any extended remarks on the subject of civil-service reform. The absolute indifference of the Senate to the subject on the Republican side is pretty well attested by the fact that there are not six members in their seats now when this matter is being discussed or reference made to it. The subject seems to be distasteful; they care to hear nothing about it, and after the performance of yesterday I am not surprised at the exhibition of their feeling on the subject. I have, however, a very strong belief in the necessity of civil-service reform, and if I am not very much mistaken in the opinion of the American people they intend to have a civil-service reform, and they do not intend that the choice for the great offices of this country is to be confined to a set of men selected by the mere machinery of a coterie of venal office-holders. In other words, this country is not to be run by a mere political machine built up on the spoils of office. The least part of such an evil as that is the ungrateful servants that are procured for the minor offices; men who lose their self-respect, who lose their conscience and give up all at the demand of party, and who are put on trial every two or every four years, who have to struggle for their livelihood, who are told that in case the party power shall go one way they are to be cast out and only in the event of success are to be kept in. What can we expect but that men will struggle for their livelihood? They will resort to almost anything to keep themselves in place, and when they are told that the tenure of their office is not dependent upon their good behavior, upon their activity, upon their industry in the public service, but entirely upon what they may do in the way of questionable party service, we have what? Not faithful and industrious officers, but active partisans. The tree must produce its fruits; the system must bear the results which necessarily are part of its nature; and then what else follows? That that is virtually to be the body by whom your Presidents are to be selected and your great officials are to be selected, because they are those who will control your conventions, who will control your nominations; and it is perfectly absurd to say that a man can vote for whom he pleases; practically the option is confined to the men who are set up to be voted for, and those must be backed by an organization or the vote is idle, and is therefore thrown away.

I do not wish to see the higher places of this country filled by a set of men who are nothing more than office-brokers, dealers in patronage, wire-pullers, and men of that class; and yet that must be it. If the question of filling the offices is to be the great matter that determines political campaigns, necessarily the men who devote themselves to such objects will be those and those only who will find themselves in public power.

Mr. President, I believe this fact has impressed itself upon the mind of the thoughtful men of this country. It is not the question of mere pecuniary loss from unfaithful service, not the mere fact of having a set of expensive, idle employés. That is the least part of it. It is the fact that you are going further and you are placing the great powers of this country and the offices of this country in the hands of a set of men who are chosen only in this office-holding manufactory of Presidents and Cabinets. I believe that great truth, that profound truth, is sinking into the minds of the people of this country, and therefore it is that I believe civil-service reform will not be a mere matter of lip-service, but I believe it is to be an essential. I can see its practical results, and I believe that the people of this country can see its practical results, and that they are not in favor of a system which shall make every clerical and ministerial office under the Government the mere spoil of party success, to be parceled out to the most active partisan or to the man who shall devote his whole time and energies to such business.

Therefore it is, sir, that I hope this rule will not be adopted. It is unnecessary. If the Senate has a bad officer it can remove him when it pleases, and if he is not a bad officer he ought not to be removed. If he is faithful and intelligent, fit for his place, and has training for it, the public exigency, the public service, demands that he should not be turned out. Therefore it is I say there is no necessity of this suggestion. As the Senator from Arkansas remarked, when you say the Senate "may elect," it means practically that they shall elect whenever they get a chance to do so. That I do not want to see.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the second clause of the rule I intended after a while to call attention to; but the Senator from Kansas alluded to it, and I may just as well say now what I intended to say when we reach that regularly. I refer to the language:

The Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms shall each appoint all the employés of his department, unless otherwise directed.

That part of the rule is entirely unnecessary, because such is the standing order of the Senate now. In 1879, at the time referred to by the Senator from Delaware, among others the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That the several officers and others in the departments of the Secretary of the Senate and of the Sergeant-at-Arms shall be appointed and removed from office by those officers respectively.

That was passed on a yea-and-nay vote of 33 to 26. The old rule, running back as far as 1854, required such removals to be subject to the approval of the presiding officer if they were made during the session, and if during the recess the officers should certify them on the first day of the meeting of the next session to the presiding officer and then he should approve or disapprove as he saw proper. In 1879 that was changed by the resolution I have just read, which is now an existing order of the Senate. Therefore this part of the rule is unnecessary, because it simply says what is already part of the rules of the Senate.

Some distinguished Senator seven or eight years ago, I believe it was Mr. Conkling, of New York, said that the Senate was never so thoroughly on its mettle or so completely aroused as when it had a rule or a point of order to discuss. I thought that observation was correct, and I have continued to think so until the present time. Now these rules that seek to change in many respects old rules of the Senate fundamentally and substitute new experiments, and to change committees and make new ones, seem to be cared for very little by the Senate, and little or no attention is paid to them. We have here now, after progressing to a certain extent for four days, got to the second of these rules, and we have not a quorum, or barely a quorum, present. I take it, Mr. President, the Senate does not care enough about them, and is willing to live, like the Dutch settlers of New York were, under the laws of the Lord until they could make better ones. I therefore move to indefinitely postpone the further consideration of this subject, not that I want it done, but I wish to see whether the Senate wants to consider these rules or thinks them of importance enough to be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves the indefinite postponement of the pending order.

Mr. MORRILL. It seems to me that it is hardly generous to make that motion when the Senate is as thin as it is at the present time. There is probably not a quorum present. I hope the Senator, if he chooses to make that motion, will wait until the Senate is a little fuller than it is at the present time.

Mr. GARLAND. That is the trouble, with due respect to the Senator; the Senate will not be fuller while we have this subject up.

Mr. MORGAN. Pending the motion of the Senator from Arkansas, I move that the Senate adjourn. If we have no business here we had better go home. There is no quorum here now. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.). The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY]. If he were here I should vote "yea." I will state that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]; otherwise I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 33; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to indefinitely postpone the subject.

Mr. GARLAND. I withdraw the motion, hoping we may keep a quorum here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Arkansas is withdrawn. The question is on the adoption of Rule II.

The proposed rule was rejected.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the next proposed rule, as follows:

RULE III.

OATHS, ETC.

The oaths or affirmations required by the Constitution and prescribed by law shall be taken and subscribed by each Senator, in open Senate, before entering upon his duties.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask the Senator from Maine if he does not consider that rule unnecessary? That is covered by a section of the Revised Statutes, section 28. I do not think myself the matter of taking oaths of office or the oaths of members of either House ought to be left to rule; it ought to be prescribed by statute, and I think section 28 of the Revised Statutes covers it, and therefore the rule will be entirely unnecessary.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I was entirely aware that no rule could be reported to the Senate which would not open itself up to discussion and amendment; and the suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas this moment recalls to my mind the fact that for the last ten years the law to which he refers, and with which I am entirely familiar, has not been complied with in the United States Senate, and Senators when they have been sworn in have not subscribed the oath which the law required. Until the attention of the President pro tempore of the Senate was called to it by this very proposed rule that duty required by the laws of the United States never had been complied with, and I doubt if there is a Senator occupying a seat here who has subscribed the oaths which he took at that desk until about two weeks ago, and that was the result of the proposed rule.

Now, the Constitution may, as the Senator from Kansas suggested, provide certain things; the laws of the United States may provide certain other things; but the provisions of the Constitution and the law it may be well to call sharply to the attention of members of any legislative body. If the rules and orders of legislative proceedings shall be examined, it will be found that large numbers of provisions in the rules are already in the Constitution and in the laws, and are placed in the rules for the very purpose of sharply calling the attention of members of legislative bodies to the requirements of the Constitution and the laws.

There was a rule here, Rule LXIII, which provided for the taking of these oaths, and this is simply a replacing of that rule by the proposed rule. If the Senator from Arkansas will notice Rule LXIII of the present code, he will find that it recites the dates of the enactment of the laws touching oaths—of course entirely unnecessary—and this rule is simply "the oaths or affirmations required by the Constitution and prescribed by law shall be taken and subscribed by each Senator in open Senate before entering upon his duties."

Of course it is not necessary that there shall be a rule like that, because the law says that the oaths which have been enacted by law shall be subscribed; and yet I say, for the want of a rule requiring it to be done in open Senate, it never has been complied with until recently. Now, what harm will this rule do? Will it not do good, and has it not already done good in calling the attention of the Senate to the requirements of law?

Mr. GARLAND. The only point between the Senator from Maine and myself is this, Mr. President: He says this matter is entirely within the control of the rule of the Senate, which I do not believe. He admits that there is a law regulating the question; and if there is a law, that is enough. After a while you will hear it said probably that A, B, C, and D can not get here because they were not sworn down in Louisiana or Arkansas or somewhere else, as the case may be; the law says they shall be sworn here. Oh, well, but here is a rule about it. If the Senate make a rule, we can repeal it or modify it. I think the matter of oaths of office ought to be regulated by statute. Where no statute undertakes to regulate it, it is very doubtful, even if ordinarily the matter were within the province of a rule of the Senate, whether the Senate could regulate it by rule.

I think if the Senator will reflect a moment he will see, admitting that there is a law on the subject, we had better not put it as a rule, but leave the law there. I know that sometimes in the rules we re-enact the Constitution or we re-enact the statutes, but that is superfluous work, and should not be quoted as a good example in making the rules of the Senate. I say section 28 of the Revised Statutes is ample without any rule, and it is a little dangerous to touch those things which are regulated by law in the rules of the Senate. That is the sole purpose I have in calling attention to it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Constitution says that each House shall be the judge of the qualification of its members and each House shall prescribe the rules of its proceeding. How, then, can it be true that a past Legislature, a past Senate and House of Representatives, may prescribe a qualification and a rule of proceeding against the wishes of an existing Senate? It seems to me that there can be no question that this is not a subject of law, but is a subject for the regulation of each House as to the qualification of its members and as to the rules of its proceeding in this as in every respect.

The Constitution prescribes the qualifications of Senators, being the age of thirty years, nine years a citizen of the United States, and citizenship of the State for which he shall be chosen, and an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution. Of these qualifications "each House is the judge; also of the rules of its proceedings." There is therefore no place for statute law to provide for an oath which shall be binding in the Senate. The Constitution is the law, and each House the sole judge.

Mr. HARRISON. I have referred to section 28 of the Revised Statutes, to which the Senator from Arkansas alluded, and I find that it is as follows:

SEC. 28. The oath of office shall be administered by the President of the Senate to each Senator who shall hereafter be elected, previous to his taking his seat.

The rule proposed by the committee is somewhat broader.

Mr. GARLAND. It uses the word "subscribed."

Mr. HARRISON. It provides that the oath shall be taken in open Senate and that it shall be subscribed by the Senator; that is, that a written oath shall go upon the files, that there shall be some evidence of his having taken the constitutional and lawful oath of his office aside from the mere record of the Journal reciting the fact; that the files of the Secretary's office shall show his own subscription to the lawful oath of office. Certainly it is competent for a rule of the Senate to prescribe the method by which this shall be done and what record shall be made of the oath. We are not, therefore, re-enacting the statute in this rule, but, recognizing the statute, are adding the additional requisite that the oath shall be taken in open Senate and shall be subscribed.

It seems to me this is the true function of a rule. It is the proper function of a rule to provide forms and methods for carrying out this statutory provision. It seems to me, therefore, that the committee were justified in reporting this rule, especially in view of the fact that the Senator from Maine has already stated that the Senate have recognized the propriety of such a rule in the past, and this is simply a modified, a simpler, and a better form of the rule as it has existed heretofore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of Rule III as proposed.

The rule was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next proposed rule will be read.

Mr. GARLAND. Before we leave the subject of the third rule I wish to make a suggestion to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will assume the unanimous consent of the Senate to treat Rule III as still before the body.

Mr. GARLAND. Not as to that, but what I suggest is to come in that connection, immediately after Rule III. What I wish to suggest would come in immediately after the third rule, and be a fourth rule, or part of the third rule, as the committee may prefer.

I find that it is a custom in the Secretary's office to record the certificates of election of Senators in full. I can see no law for it and no rule for it, and yet I think this in the main a very good idea; that is to say, I think there should be some record of that matter, but I do not believe that the entire certificate should be recorded. My attention was called to it by a very lengthy certificate coming from some State, which was read here at the opening of this session and the Acting Secretary brought it to me for my opinion as to how much of it he should record. Then on looking to the law and to the rule I could find neither on the subject. Of course if he had to record any of it he had to record it all; it was not with him to make a selection. I think it is very well for a rule to be adopted in this connection to the effect that a record of an abstract of the certificates shall be kept by the Secretary, and not an entire complete record of all the certificates, as of deeds and mortgages, but the mere date of the certificate, who gave it, and to whom it was given. I wish to make the suggestion to the chairman of the committee for what it is worth. I have no particular pride about it. I shall offer the amendment if the committee think it worth while to put it in as a new rule.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator has not written it?

Mr. GARLAND. I will write it.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will please draft the amendment he can submit it.

Mr. GARLAND. Let the report be proceeded with and I can call attention to it afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next proposed rule will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read as follows:

RULE IV.

COMMENCEMENT OF DAILY SESSIONS.

1. The presiding officer having taken the chair, and a quorum being present, the Journal of the preceding day shall be read, and any mistake made in the entries corrected. The reading of the Journal shall not be suspended unless by unanimous consent; and when any motion shall be made to amend or correct the same, it shall be deemed a privileged question, and proceeded with until disposed of.

2. A quorum shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I would ask the Senator who has the proposed rules in charge if the last clause is not a little in opposition to the spirit of the Constitution? I do not know what necessity there is for adding it. I am not aware of any great difficulty ever having been experienced under the old rule. This says a quorum "shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn."

Mr. FRYE. That is the old rule.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Why is it printed in italics here?

Mr. FRYE. I will answer the Senator, because a discussion was had away back in 1863, I think, touching this very question, and the Senate by a vote in 1864 decided that a rule was absolutely necessary, and they passed in 1864 a rule and it was repeated again in the next revision. There is no change in this rule except a verbal change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of Rule IV.

The rule was agreed to.

The next proposed rule was read, as follows:

RULE V.

JOURNAL.

1. The proceedings of the Senate shall be briefly and accurately stated on the Journal. Messages of the President in full; titles of bills and joint resolutions, and such parts as shall be affected by proposed amendments; every vote, and a brief statement of the contents of each petition, memorial, or paper presented to the Senate, shall be entered.

2. The legislative, the executive, the confidential legislative proceedings, and the proceedings when sitting as a court of impeachment, shall each be recorded in a separate book.

Mr. FRYE. There is no change in substance; only an alteration in form.

The rule was agreed to.

The next proposed rule was read, as follows:

RULE VI.

QUORUM—ABSENT SENATORS MAY BE SENT FOR.

1. No Senator shall absent himself from the service of the Senate without leave.

2. If, at any time during the daily sessions of the Senate, a question shall be raised by any Senator as to the presence of a quorum, the presiding officer shall forthwith direct the Secretary to call the roll and shall announce the result, and these proceedings shall be without debate.

3. Whenever upon such roll-call it shall be ascertained that a quorum is not present, a majority of the Senators present may direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request, and, when necessary, to compel, the attendance of the absent Senators, which order shall be determined without debate; and pending its execution, and until a quorum shall be present, no debate nor motion, except to adjourn, shall be in order.

Mr. FRYE. The changes there are only of form, not of substance.

The rule was agreed to.

The next proposed rule was read, as follows:

RULE VII.

PRESENTATION OF CREDENTIALS.

The presentation of the credentials of Senators-elect and other questions of privilege shall always be in order, except during the reading and correction of the Journal, while a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and all questions and motions arising or made upon the presentation of such credentials shall be proceeded with until disposed of.

Mr. FRYE. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to Rule VII which relates to credentials, and I suggest to him if he offers the proposed amendment touching the record of credentials that he make it clause 2 of that rule.

Mr. GARLAND. Very well; that will do.

Mr. FRYE. There is no change here except as to form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas now propose his amendment?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, sir; I move to add as clause 2 of Rule VII:

That the Secretary shall keep a record of the certificate of election of each Senator by entering in a well-bound book, kept for that purpose, the date of the election, the name of the person elected, the vote given at the election, the date of the certificate, the name of the governor and the secretary of state signing and countersigning the same, and the State from which the Senator is elected.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest to the Senator instead of naming the officers "governor and secretary of state," he say "officers signing the certificate," because the practice of the States is not uniform as to the name of the officers certifying or signing the certificate.

Mr. GARLAND. That is a matter regulated by the act of July 28, 1866, and I want to make it uniform. I have a bill now before the Committee on Privileges and Elections for that purpose. The statute of 1866 says these certificates must be signed by certain officers, and I follow that in the proposed amendment. As I stated before, it is simply to relieve an onerous piece of work that has grown up here simply by custom.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it important that the book should be "well bound?"

Mr. GARLAND. I expect it had better be.

Mr. CONGER. I can not tell now certainly, but I think the credentials of Senators from the State of Michigan do not require the signature of the governor or other officer. My impression is that they are simply a record of the proceedings of the senate and house of representatives of the State certified to by the president of the senate and speaker of the house. If so, this amendment would not meet that case. I ask that this amendment be passed over until another day.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that we adopt it now, and the Senator can, when we get into the Senate, ask a separate vote upon it and get the certainty of a review of the question in that way.

Mr. CONGER. It is easier before a rule is adopted to have it conform to the facts than it is to change it afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the consideration of this amendment may be passed over for the present, with the right to return to it hereafter. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONGER. The matter can be taken up at any time hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be called up by the Senator at any time hereafter. The question is on the adoption of Rule VII as reported. The Chair will consider the whole rule as passed over by the order of the Senate, and the next proposed rule will be read.

Rule VIII was read, as follows:

RULE VIII.

MORNING BUSINESS.

1. After the Journal is read, the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate messages from the President, reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the Senate; and such bills, joint resolutions, and other messages from the House of Representatives as may remain upon his table from any previous day's session undisposed of. The presiding officer shall then call for, in the following order:

"The presentation of petitions and memorials;

"Reports of standing and select committees;

"The introduction of bills and joint resolutions;

"Concurrent and other resolutions;"

all which shall be received and disposed of in such order unless unanimous consent shall be otherwise given.

2. Until the morning business shall have been concluded, and so announced from the chair, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any other business shall be entertained by the presiding officer unless by unanimous consent; and if such consent be given the motion shall not be subject to amendment, and shall be decided without debate upon the merits of the subject proposed to be taken up.

3. Every petition or memorial shall be referred, without putting the question, unless objection to such reference is made; in which case all motions for the reception or reference of such petition, memorial, or other paper shall be put in the order in which the same shall be made, and shall not be open to amendment, except to add instructions.

4. Before any petition or memorial shall be received, it shall be signed by the petitioner or memorialist, and a brief statement of its contents made by the presiding officer or Senator presenting it. But no petition or memorial or other paper signed by citizens or subjects of a foreign power shall be received, unless the same be transmitted to the Senate by the President.

Mr. FRYE. All the changes in this rule except one are as to form; but there is one material change, and I call the attention of Senators to it, as it is a somewhat lengthy rule, and this might be overlooked. There is a provision in the old rule, Rule VIII, second clause, just before "Petitions:"

If any portion of the morning hour shall remain after the call for resolutions, the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate, in their order, resolutions and concurrent resolutions introduced on any prior day, and the same may be proceeded with, but not beyond the expiration of the morning hour, unless by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

That is entirely dropped out in the new Rule VIII for the reason that the committee has recommended that what is called the "morning hour" as such shall be abolished, and that the time shall be devoted to the privileged morning business, and that as soon as the morning business is completed then the Calendar of unobjected cases shall be taken up; so that if that rule were adopted it would be necessary to drop out this part of the rule touching resolutions. I simply call the attention of Senators to it, and will say nothing further unless——

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I have read this hastily and it may be that I do not comprehend its force; but, if I do, it seems to me to make a very serious and important change in the rule. As I understand it, the present rule is:

Until the business of the morning hour shall have been concluded and so announced from the chair, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the Calendar shall be entertained by the Chair, unless by unanimous consent.

The present rule, therefore, requires the unanimous consent of the Senate only when it is desired to substitute for the pending business of the morning hour some ordinary legislation which is upon the Calendar. But the proposed rule goes further and absolutely compels the attention of the Senate until the entire morning business is disposed of, under which, of course, references to committees and other dispositions of petitions and bills are debatable, and debatable at great length, unless by unanimous consent. So if there be an invasion of the privileges of the Senate, if there be some question of that kind, if notice is given of the decease of a member, and it is necessary to take up the provision for a decent and proper ceremonial which follows, no business whatever can be entertained, under the new rule, at the desire of every member of the Senate but one, until this morning business is disposed of. It seems to me whether that is a wise change in the rule is pretty doubtful, and at least it is a very substantial one.

Mr. FRYE. "Bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the Calendar" includes almost everything that can come before the United States Senate, as it seems to me.

Mr. HOAR. No, because the subjects on the Calendar are legislative matters which in their nature are not matters of privilege, and they are not matters which ordinarily require instant attention. The very fact that they have been put on the Calendar to be taken up at a future time shows that. The old rule provides for the superiority of privilege by putting new business by petition or memorial or bill or joint resolution over the old business which is already under way, so that it may at least get its place in court. Out of respect for the right of petition, really, this rule as it now stands was enacted. There are two ways in which under our practice citizens bring their grievances to the attention of Congress to be remedied: by petition or by drawing a bill and getting it introduced. We provide that the legislation which has got its stand shall give way during the morning hour until any new subject is at least heard by the Senate, so that it may know something of its nature and may take measures for its investigation. But the proposed rule, unless my friend shall be able to show me that I have not understood it correctly, seems to me to say that no question of the highest privilege, no question of the highest importance, not merely a matter on the Calendar, but no business whatever, shall be taken up without the consent of the entire Senate. It seems to me that that is certainly a very substantial change.

Mr. FRYE. My judgment is that the rule does provide that no business whatever shall interfere with the calling of the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose, for instance, there is a message from the House of Representatives announcing the decease of a Representative; suppose the announcement is made by a member of the Senate to the Senate of the decease of a member of this body; suppose there is some grave question of privilege which requires the instant interposition of our authority; or suppose there is some matter of business not upon the Calendar, a question of the suspension of a rule, which requires to be taken up and dealt with immediately as most urgent, is the Senate to tie its hands until one member, wishing to satisfy himself against a majority of the Senate, or two members get through debating ad infinitum every morning hour until debate is concluded upon the question of reference of a bill?

Since I have been in public life, and since I think the honorable Senator from Maine has been in Congress, a member of the House of Representatives was attacked in the street, and attacked by a person who the House found attacked him because of his official character. It was treated as a contempt of the House, and yet there was a very strenuous resistance on the part of a small minority of the House of Representatives to dealing with that subject at all. Now, under this rule you have only got to debate a question of the reference of a petition or bill all the morning hour, as much as any body pleases, to prevent the dealing with a question of that kind.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator does not exactly state that correctly. There is no morning hour, if these rules are adopted.

Mr. HOAR. Then it is still more; it is morning business.

Mr. FRYE. It is "morning business," not "morning hour."

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator mean to say that if I desire to prevent the taking up of a bill which is in order and half proceeded with, which nine-tenths of the Senate want to pass, I have only to debate the reference of some other bill in the morning hour forever to stop that coming up under the new rule?

Mr. FRYE. But the old rule provided that no bill or resolution or report of a committee should be considered during the morning hour except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. But the old rule only applied to such things, and stopped at the end of an hour; the new rule extends it to all business and goes on forever——

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. HOAR. Indefinitely.

Mr. FRYE. No; the new rule simply closes up the time between the completion of the morning business and the time of taking up the Calendar at 1 o'clock.

Mr. INGALLS. No; I think the Senator is wrong about that.

Mr. HOAR. That was the reason of my suggestion.

Mr. INGALLS. One o'clock will be no longer known in the Calendar of the Senate after this rule is adopted.

Mr. FRYE. It simply, I said, closed up at the business which under the old rule interposed between the completion of the morning business and the completion of the one hour.

Mr. INGALLS. You abolish 1 o'clock.

Mr. FRYE. Yes, we abolish 1 o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. The morning business extends through the day until the morning business is completed.

Mr. FRYE. My impression is that there is another rule somewhere which fixes that. It cannot extend beyond 2 o'clock under the next rule—IX.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose the President sends a message proposing a declaration of war? It seems to me that in saving the Senate from the previous question (in which I heartily concur with the conclusion the committee have finally adopted, because I think that the preservation in this country of one body where the power of debate, free and full speech, and the power of amendment is unlimited is of very great importance to constitutional liberty) there is no occasion for the change here proposed. One of the great historians of Rome has declared that the liberties of Rome perished when the freedom of debate in the Senate was terminated by the adoption of a rule like our previous question. In doing that it seems to me the rules of the Senate should scrupulously, within that principle, avoid putting the majority into the hands of a minority consisting of a single member in regard to the transaction of business.

Mr. FRYE. I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether or not this affords the remedy:

2. Until the morning business shall have been concluded and so announced from the chair no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the Calendar shall be entertained by the presiding officer unless by unanimous consent?

Mr. HOAR. That would leave it as it is now. That very largely changes it. My objection is to the words "other business."

Mr. FRYE. As "other business" was simply put in not with the intention of changing the rule as far as that is concerned but simply of reducing the language, I will take the liberty of offering an amendment there, as follows: Instead of "other business" insert "bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the Calendar." That will leave it as it was before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAWYER in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. HOAR. That would relieve the thing very much, but it seems to me that there should be some time in the day fixed for closing the morning business. Suppose you do continue the morning business until it is finished ordinarily, yet there should be some time in the day at which at least a majority of the Senate may lay aside that morning business to proceed to some matter of great importance. It would seem to me that the rule should read that "until the morning business shall have been concluded and so announced from the chair, or until the expiration of one hour from the beginning of its consideration," &c. I will not press that motion myself, but I suggest it to the chairman of the committee as a matter for reflection.

Mr. FRYE. Then would come in the difficulty which I have observed ever since I have been here. After the first two or three weeks of the session, when the general raft of bills and resolutions has been presented, the morning business really closes fifteen or twenty minutes after 12 o'clock, and then between the completion of the morning business and the Calendar at 1 o'clock there is a hiatus, and my recollection is that on almost every day that was entirely consumed by discussions between Senators as to what business should occupy that time, and practically no business was ever done in it. One purpose of the committee was to get rid of just exactly that time so occupied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator include in the term "resolution" any new resolution proposed by a Senator, or does he mean simply a resolution already upon the Calendar?

Mr. FRYE. A resolution on the Calendar.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It says a resolution or bill on the Calendar. It leaves it open for any new matter.

Mr. FRYE. That is the old rule exactly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I agree entirely with the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts that there should be some limitation in point of time upon the presentation of what is now known as morning business. The original rule I see was adopted on the 14th of February, 1828—upon the top of page 6:

The special orders of the day shall not be called by the Chair before 1 o'clock, unless otherwise directed by the Senate.

Under the operation of the rule as reported by the committee, and from which the consideration of the Senate is about apparently to pass, the entire time of the legislative day may be consumed in the presentation of the business that is named in the first clause of Rule VIII, to wit: The presentation of petitions and memorials, reports of standing and select committees, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, concurrent and other resolutions. It is not, evidently, the intention of the rules, nor would it comport with the satisfactory discharge of the public business, that the consideration of these four heads of business should continue indefinitely through the entire legislative day. It is not possible that parliamentary business can be conducted on that basis; and while I should be very glad indeed to see the old practice amended, by which the consideration of business was prevented in the interval between the expiration of the call for this order and the striking of 1 o'clock, yet it appears to me very obvious that serious inconvenience may result from the modification of the rule as presented by the committee.

I hope therefore that the chairman will either consent that this matter may be passed over for further consideration or agree that the period named in the original rule as the morning hour may be re-established in the rule. I can see that very serious inconvenience might result, and of course under the rule as it now stands the presentation of petitions and of reports and of resolutions and bills might continue every day until 5 o'clock if that suited the convenience or the caprice of Senators, if they ever indulge in caprice.

Mr. FRYE. No, Mr. President, not quite so, because if the Senator will examine Rule X he will find a provision there which requires the general Calendar to be taken up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. INGALLS. But that rule is not yet adopted. I am talking about the condition of things as it now stands.

Mr. FRYE. Of course the amendments prior to that offered by the committee are founded upon the expectation of the adoption of the latter provisions.

Mr. INGALLS. Now will not the Senator read the clause to which he invites attention as curing the difficulty that I have suggested?

Mr. FRYE. It reads: "Immediately after the consideration of unobjected cases upon the Calendar is completed, and not later than 2 o'clock——"

Mr. INGALLS. Good.

Mr. FRYE. "If there shall be no special order for that time the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order."

Mr. INGALLS. I do not see myself how that cures the difficulty that is spoken of.

Mr. FRYE. Let me see if this will be entirely satisfactory to the Senator: Already twice during the present session of the Senate on a request from the Senator the morning hour has been extended for the reception of bills, resolutions, &c., and of course at times it may require more than an hour, but the greater part of the time not more than fifteen or twenty minutes are required. Now suppose, as suggested to me by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], after the word "chair," in the second clause, it read "until the morning business shall have been concluded and so announced from the chair, or until the hour of 1 o'clock shall have arrived, no motion shall be entertained," &c.

Mr. INGALLS. I think that will be satisfactory.

Mr. FRYE. Allow me to ask the Senator—I ask him because I am aware of his knowledge of the rules—whether or not he would in any way interfere with the purpose of the committee to make use of the portion of that hour which is not consumed by morning business?

Mr. INGALLS. I should think not.

Mr. FRYE. Then, Mr. President, in order to meet the difficulty proposed, I will move to insert after the word "chair," in the second clause, the words:

Or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived.

Mr. BAYARD. May I suggest to the Senator whether in fixing in that way the hour of 1 o'clock and in Rule IX the hour of 2 o'clock for the operation of the Anthony rule, so called, we do not dispose of the first hour of the session and the second hour also. As the session draws near a close the pressure of business makes us commence our sessions an hour earlier, and we meet for the last three or four weeks of the session at 11 o'clock in the day. The morning hour is less requisite at the close of the session than at the beginning of the session. At the beginning of the session, as Senators all know, there is the presentation of new business or the reintroduction of old business, and the time for the morning hour is more essentially demanded; whereas the longer the session progresses the less business is to be presented anew in that hour. Therefore it seems to me that if we wish to confine the morning business to one hour and the business on the Calender under the Anthony rule, so called, to another hour, we had better not fix the specific hour of the day in the rule for one at 1 o'clock and for the other at 2, because you may find in that way you have extended the morning hour to two hours and the Anthony rule one hour beyond the two.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Delaware will allow me to suggest that the amendment which the chairman of the committee has now indicated a purpose to offer was simply intended to remove the objection that otherwise the entire session or an unreasonable portion of the time might be occupied with morning business. He has suggested in this amendment that the hour of 1 o'clock be named, and in the next rule 2 o'clock. Now in the contingeney which the Senator from Delaware has suggested, that the Senate towards the conclusion of the session, being pressed with business, would meet at 11 o'clock, this first rule would simply put a limitation of 1 o'clock upon the morning business. It is not likely that two hours would be needed for it.

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly not.

Mr. HARRISON. And the other rule would send us at once to the Calendar whenever we were through with morning business; so that in the case he suggests there would be a possibility that the morning business might occupy two hours if it was pressing; but there is, I think, no practical objection, for at that period of the session, as we all know, the morning business is not pressing.

Mr. BAYARD. My design was merely to facilitate a rule that would not give the entire day to the consideration of morning business, as I supposed the object of the Senator from Kansas was to prevent it. The rule under which the Senate has proceeded for so many years, Rule VIII, provides that the first hour of daily session shall be designated as the morning hour, during which a certain order of business shall follow. Therefore you have the designation of the hour and the limitation of the consideration of that business to that period of time, so that whatever may be your hour of meeting, if 10 o'clock, you have one hour to 11, if 11 o'clock 1 to 12, for morning business; but if you fix the hour of 1 o'clock and meet at 11 you have two hours for the morning business, which I suppose it is not the desire to have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine move the amendment which he indicated?

Mr. FRYE. I move the amendment in clause 2 of Rule VIII, line 2, after the word "chair," to insert:

Or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the rule as amended.

The rule as amended was agreed to.

The next proposed rule was read, as follows:

RULE IX.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of bills and resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock; and bills and resolutions that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only upon any question; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings, but upon motion the Senate may continue such consideration; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions," and shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders. But if the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of any matter notwithstanding an objection, the foregoing provisions touching debate shall not apply.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask whether in the first part of that rule, which reads "At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order," the "motion" there spoken of would require any notice?

Mr. FRYE. I suppose not. I suppose that really refers to the motions provided for in Rule X, which are privileged motions—the motion to proceed to the consideration of a revenue or an appropriation bill, the motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar, &c.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask simply whether the rule the Senator proposes means a motion of which no previous notice has been given?

Mr. FRYE. I think it refers to those privileged motions named in the next rule. This is the Anthony rule, only changed slightly in form.

Mr. BAYARD. What I mean is that a single objection would not prevent a matter being considered.

Mr. FRYE. I have no question about that.

Mr. HARRIS. It is simply a motion to consider something else, which never has been held to require a day's notice. It is always a motion disposed of immediately.

Mr. BAYARD. I only want that made clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of Rule IX.

The rule was agreed to.

The next proposed rule was read, as follows:

RULE X.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—Continued.

Immediately after the consideration of unobjected cases upon the Calendar is completed, and not later than 2 o'clock, if there shall be no special orders for that time, the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order, beginning with the first subject on the Calendar next after the last subject disposed of in proceeding with the Calendar; and in such case the following motions shall be in order at any time as privileged motions, save as against a motion to adjourn, or to proceed to the consideration of executive business, or questions of privilege, to wit:

First. A motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation or revenue bill.

Second. A motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar.

Third. A motion to pass over the pending subject, which, if carried, shall have the effect to leave such subject without prejudice in its place on the Calendar.

Fourth. A motion to place such subject at the foot of the Calendar.

Each of the foregoing motions shall be decided without debate, and shall have precedence in the order above named, and may be submitted as in the nature and with all the rights of questions of order.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend the second clause, "A motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar," by adding the words:

Which motion shall not be open to amendment,

So as to confine the question to the particular bill a Senator may choose to suggest in lieu of the business then pending in the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I see no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the rule as amended.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the word "unobjected" as an adjective is one that has crept into our parliamentary usage in the last few years without any authority of lexicography, and I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Rules, in the interest of reform in speech, that that clause be changed so as to read:

Immediately after the consideration of cases not objected to upon the Calendar is completed.

Mr. FRYE. I think that the language used by the Senator from Kansas is an improvement.

Mr. INGALLS. There is no such word as "unobjected" used in this sense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves to amend by striking out in the first line "unobjected" after "of" and after "cases" in the same line, inserting "not objected to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the rule as amended.

The rule as amended was agreed to.

The next proposed rule was read, as follows:

RULE XI.

SPECIAL ORDERS.

1. Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the presiding officer shall lay it before the Senate, unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day; and if it is not finally disposed of on that day, it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

2. When two or more special orders have been made for the same time they shall have precedence according to the order in which they were severally assigned, and that order shall only be changed by direction of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. That does not change the substance of Rules X, XI, and XII, but does change the form entirely.

Mr. INGALLS. Does it incorporate all the provisions contained in those three rules?

Mr. FRYE. All the provisions contained in those three rules.

The rule was agreed to.

The next proposed rule was read, as follows:

RULE XII.

OBJECTION TO READING A PAPER.

When the reading of a paper is called for and objected to, it shall be determined by a vote of the Senate, without debate.

Mr. FRYE. There is no change there.

The rule was agreed to.

The next proposed rule was read, as follows:

RULE XIII.

VOTING, ETC.

1. When the yeas and nays are ordered, the names of Senators shall be called alphabetically; and each Senator shall, without debate, declare his assent or dissent to the question, unless excused by the Senate; and no Senator shall be permitted to vote after the decision shall have been announced by the presiding officer, but may for sufficient reasons, with unanimous consent, change or withdraw his vote. No motion to suspend this rule shall be in order, nor shall the presiding officer entertain any request to suspend it by unanimous consent.

2. When a Senator declines to vote on call of his name he shall be required to assign his reasons therefor, and having assigned them, the presiding officer shall submit the question to the Senate: "Shall the Senator, for the reasons assigned by him, be excused from voting?" which shall be decided without debate; and these proceedings shall be had after the roll-call and before the result is announced; and any further proceedings in reference thereto shall be after such announcement.

Mr. BAYARD. I was in hopes that when the committee recast that rule they would provide in some way against the repetition of scenes that I have witnessed in this Chamber, whereby, a quorum being present, a sufficient number of Senators remained silent when their names were called and though in their seats refused to vote, and on the question preliminary to the demand that a Senator should vote yea or nay, and after hearing his reasons whether he should be compelled to vote or not when called upon by the presiding officer, remained silent, so that there was no decision reached by the Senate (which means a quorum of the Senate). Thus, although there was a majority of those present ready to act and that majority a constitutional majority because the majority of a quorum present, there was a dead-lock put, or to speak more accurately a paralysis inflicted, upon legislation by Senators sitting in silence and refusing to obey the laws of their own creation. It seemed to me to have features in it of the most unfortunate kind, in some respects rather more dangerous than the doctrine of secession which we have heard condemned, and so justly, for it appears to me much better that Senators should leave the Chamber and be absent from their seats than to sit here and vote when they please and withhold their votes when they please without any regard to public interests or the rules of this body.

I do not know that the Senate can frame a rule which shall compel a man to speak against his will. They can by law prevent his speaking and can remove him from the place where he can speak; but I know of no law that can compel him to speak against his will; but possibly there might be some punitive measure brought in to prevent an absolute contempt of the body, a contempt of its rules, a contempt of the objects of legislation for which we were assembled, which has been witnessed in this Chamber I am sorry to say upon more than one occasion. The persons who refused to vote sat still and virtually said, "Business shall not proceed unless it be in the way we desire; a quorum is present; we are part of that quorum; but we prefer to stand mute and to answer not when our names are called, and in that way arrest all proceedings of public business unless we can have our way and prevent the will of the majority from being performed."

I do not know, sir, precisely by what means you are to procure or by what penalties you can exact the performance of and obedience to the rules of the Senate, but I have seen this very rule laughed to scorn in the Senate, I have seen it derided, nullified by the utterly disorderly and insubordinate action of a number necessary to assist in forming a quorum for the transaction of business. When this question came to be examined by the light of our experience I was in hopes that there would be some rather more stringent method that would compel Senators to answer one way or the other when they were in their seats, and it was their duty to answer one way or the other.

I have a right to speak of this, because in days long gone by, when I was a member of a very feeble minority in this Chamber and we were compelled to sit at one time three days by a vast majority who were hurrying through business which we thought destructive of the interests of the country, the proposition was made that we could withhold our votes, break a quorum, and compel a portion of the vast majority to come here and form their own quorum. When that rule was first read to me, though I believed I had then as much justification for withholding my vote as could be given under any stated condition of affairs, I bowed to the rule, for I believed there was a duty incumbent on me when I entered the body and an obedience to the rules to the creation of which I had been a party, and therefore I never under any circumstances sat mute in defiance of the rule or refused to vote when I was called upon under the rules to answer.

I do not know that machinery can be provided in the form of a rule to compel subordination to the great object for which we are assembled here, but I wish very much that while this matter is in the hands of a special committee, and with the experience and history of events in this body before them, there could have been some improvement upon a rule which had been quoted and read only to be despised.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I will not offer an amendment to this rule now, but inasmuch as the measure before the Senate is to be considered in the Senate after we have passed through it in Committee of the Whole, I will venture to suggest that the difficulty which the Senator from Delaware has encountered and we all have so frequently here might possibly be obviated in a safe way in this manner: allow the rule to stand just as the committee have reported it, and add to it a provision of this character, that a Senator being present and declining to vote, the presiding officer shall announce the presence of the Senator and direct the Secretary to record his vote in the negative, for if he is here and not participating in the proceedings it is a fair presumption that he is opposed to what is going on and is opposed to the will of the Senate in the particular in which the Senate is about to execute its will.

Mr. INGALLS. Silence gives consent usually.

Mr. MORGAN. Silence does usually give consent, but not in practice in the Senate, for when consent is withheld by a Senator who is present to form a constitutional quorum to do business it must be on the ground that he is opposed to what the Senate is trying to do, and it would be only fair that his vote should be recorded in the negative when he declines to vote himself. The rule being well understood beforehand the Senator would comprehend the consequences of his refusal to vote. If he were to absent himself from the body, as he might do until the body was reduced below the number required for a quorum, then the Senate could order him to be brought in. If he still refused to vote, however, the order of the Senate in that particular would be entirely nugatory, although it had executed its will by having him brought within the body.

I throw out the suggestion, not in the form of an amendment at this time, but for the consideration of the Senate and the committee, so that we may see whether there is any danger in this suggestion.

Mr. FRYE. I had the honor once to be on a House Committee on Rules which had a revision intrusted to it. The members of the committee were Mr. RANDALL, Mr. Stephens of Georgia, Mr. Garfield, Mr. BLACKBURN, and myself, and I think we honestly and conscientiously undertook to provide a rule which should compel members of the House to vote when their names were called. We worked upon it two or three days and we failed. It can not be done by any rule or constitution or law, or anything else except the Senator's own sense of propriety and decency.

Mr. President, there are several forms of filibustering, so called. One is by making motions to adjourn and motions to adjourn to a day certain one after the other, the one always in order, the other being interposed, and calling for the yeas and nays. In the House of Representatives under its present rules, and under any rules it has ever had within my knowledge, a vote can not by any possibility be reached so long as a minority sufficient to order the yeas and nays can maintain physically the conflict.

It may be that filibustering ought now and then to be resorted to by a minority in the preservation of an imperiled right, and it may be that they would be justified in resorting to it under extraordinary circumstances; but it brings, in my judgment, a body into contempt, and ought to bring it into contempt, when it is resorted to on every trivial occasion, just as the cross-examining of witnesses, as all lawyers understand, brings cross-examination into contempt, and makes it utterly useless when it is tried in the case of every witness who presents himself.

Now take the case of a Senator sitting still in his seat. I do not myself believe that it is ever justifiable. I believe that the Senator should vote. The Committee on Rules of the Senate undertook to consider that very question and to provide for it, and after discussing it for an hour or two they unanimously gave it up as an utter impossibility.

Mr. BAYARD. Questions of Senators' personal interest may prevent their voting sometimes.

Mr. FRYE. If you propose to fine, nobody cares for a fine when he is acting with his party, and the fine will certainly be remitted in time. If you propose censure, who cares for a censure when he is acting in accord with his side? It amounts to nothing. You may lead the horse to the brook, but you can not make him drink. You can not make a Senator say "yea" or "nay" by any rule. The Senate itself can be a rule to itself, so that no other rule would ever be necessary touching that single matter. So far as I am concerned, I agree with the Senator from Delaware entirely, and I put myself upon his platform. I never will while I am in the Senate, at the dictate of my party, sit silent and refrain from voting to destroy a quorum. I shall exercise the privilege of voting from duty, for that method of filibustering, it seems to me, is entirely improper, and almost indecent, in a body like the United States Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, it has been said that the habit of refusing to vote in violation of the rule is an ancient custom. I should like to know when it ever occurred in the Senate of the United States until within the last six or seven years. I ask the Senator from Delaware if he ever heard of a case of Senators refusing to vote until within the last six or seven years.

Mr. BAYARD. No, sir. I have stated to the Senate my own experience on the subject. It was not six or seven years ago; I think it was perhaps twelve or thirteen years since, when there were only about five or six men of my way of thinking in this Chamber, and I did once withhold my vote; but the rule was read, and as soon as I heard the rule read I bowed to the rule and voted, and I never sat in my place and withheld my vote against the instruction of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not worth while for us by rules to guard against an abuse and violation of a public duty which never occurred during some eighty years in the history of the Government and has only occurred three or four times, probably not so often. I never knew it to occur; I never was in the Senate of the United States when a Senator refused to answer to his name, except sometimes when he was paired or declined to vote, and no one desired him to vote; but I never yet saw a Senator refuse to answer to his name in order to break up a quorum. It is just as revolutionary an act as it would be to fire a musket at the President of the United States.

There is a great distinction between this refusing to vote and the making of dilatory motions. The making of dilatory motions is a right given by the rules. It is given to secure amplitude of debate; consideration, to gain time; and therefore, although sometimes very wearisome and very hard to submit to, especially through a long night session, yet we feel bound to yield to it, because a Senator exercises a right which the rules give him. But a man who refuses to vote when his name is called upon a question before the Senate violates the rules and places himself in antagonism to the rules that he has himself probably voted for, or at least that were adopted by the body of which he is a member. I say, for one, that I never have refused and I never will refuse to answer to my name, when it is called in my presence, with my vote, and I can not imagine any circumstances, the gravity of any vote, that would induce me to refuse to vote when my name was called on a lawful calling of the roll.

I do not think it is worth while for us to guard against a contingency that, although it happened three of four times in the recent history of the Senate, will probably never happen again. I have heard the lecture read many times on this subject; I do not think any of us will ever forget it. It is only a modern practice; it only occurred in three or four instances, and by both sides of the Chamber, as I am informed, though I was not here. It has been practiced in two or three rare instances by both sides of the Chamber in times of high party excitement, and it is not a thing that can be guarded against by rule. It is revolutionary and dangerous. I hope, therefore, no attempt will be made to either apply a penalty or to record a man as voting when he does not vote, and thus make the Journal a falsehood, or do anything at all to guard against a remote danger that probably will not occur again in our time.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, there seems to be a natural difficulty, a difficulty of fact, involved here. Under our form of government a majority has a right to control the action of the deliberative body; but if circumstances arise such as have been witnessed in the past and as have been discussed in the debate on this proposition, the power of that majority is taken away, it may be by a single member, and at all events in any case it is within the power of a minority to do it. Now, it seems to me that if the majority is present we may be able to adopt a rule which will enable the body to act, and that we ought to do so; and I would suggest an addition to this rule, in language something like this—and which I would submit for the consideration of the Senator from Alabama, as he proposes to offer an amendment—if we could adopt language something like this, it seems to me, it would enable us to carry on this Government:

That a question shall be decided whenever a majority of a quorum shall vote, there being a quorum present in the Chamber at any time during the roll-call.

If we could adopt language of that kind it would enable us to act, if there is any possibility of our adopting any rule that will do so.

Mr. INGALLS. How would that effect it?

Mr. BLAIR. There could be no majority of those present unless under the provisions of this proposition a decision could be secured. There would be, of course, in order that the body could act at all, necessarily a quorum present in the Chamber. There must be thirty-one, if the deliberative body consists of sixty members. That thirty-one has, under the theory of our institutions and of all deliberative bodies, a right to act, and a majority of the thirty-one may carry a proposition. But the difficulty we meet with is, that a majority of the thirty-one being present, some one or more refuse to act and the proposed action of the body is nullified. This difficulty would be met and would be overcome by a provision such as is covered by this proposition, that a man should be presumed to have voted if he was present and did in reality assist to make up a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. As these amendments, which have been proposed or indicated by the different Senators, can be offered in the Senate and have not yet been formulated, I suggest that we proceed with the rule, and Senators having this matter in their mind can present their amendments in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana suggests the passing over of this rule.

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir; not that we pass over it, but that we pass it in committee, and the amendments can be moved afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of Rule XIII.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I notice that one clause of this rule forbids the voting of a Senator after the decision shall have been announced, and declares that he may, for sufficient reasons, with unanimous consent, change or withdraw his vote; that is to say, after the decision has been announced. It seems from the reading of the rule that permission might be given to withdraw the vote when it would change the result. I suppose it can not have been the intention of the Committee on Rules to permit the withdrawal of a vote after the decision has been announced when it would change the result. I would suggest that there should be some further modification necessary, because it would be very strange parliamentary practice to have the yeas and nays recorded in the affirmative, for instance, carrying a measure, and then permit the change or withdrawal of a vote after the announcement of the decision, so that the Journal would show that the majority was on the other side.

Mr. HARRISON. I think in this respect the proposed rule as reported by the committee is identical with our present Rule XVIII.

Perhaps that is subject to the objection which the Senator from Kansas has suggested, but it is not new with the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. No change or withdrawal of a vote ought to be allowed after the decision is announced if it changes the result. I state that as a proposition which demands general consent. I would suggest that the proposed rule be amended by inserting after "change or withdraw his vote" the words "provided such change or withdrawal will not alter the result."

Mr. FRYE. Suppose a Senator has made a mistake?

Mr. INGALLS. That is his misfortune, of course, if he may have made a mistake; but after the decision has been announced by the Chair, and in parliamentary practice the decision has gone into active operation as a practical result, then to allow a man to come in and change or withdraw his vote would certainly be to nullify the entire proceeding.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him that it can only be done by "unanimous consent?"

Mr. INGALLS. It ought not be allowed to be done at all.

Mr. HARRISON. "And for sufficient reasons," so that it is entirely in the power of any Senator voting with the majority to prevent a change in the result by the withdrawal or change of a vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. The present rule has the same provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of Rule XIII.

The rule was agreed to.

The next proposed rule was read, as follows:

RULE XIV.

RECONSIDERATION.

1. When a question has been decided by the Senate, any Senator of the prevailing side may, on the same day or on either of the next two days of actual session thereafter, move a reconsideration; and if the Senate shall refuse to reconsider, or upon reconsideration shall affirm its first decision, no further motion to reconsider shall be in order unless by unanimous consent. Every motion to reconsider shall be decided by a majority vote, without debate, and may be laid on the table without affecting the question in reference to which the same is made, which shall be a final disposition of the motion.

2. When a bill, resolution, report, amendment, order, or message, upon which a vote has been taken, shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate and been communicated to the House of Representatives, the motion to reconsider shall be accompanied by a motion to request the House to return the same; which last motion shall be acted upon immediately and without debate, and if determined in the negative, shall be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BAYARD. I submit to the Senator from Maine whether in the desire to condense the phraseology of these rules he has not left out a word which ought to be left. This reads "When a question has been decided by the Senate any Senator of the prevailing side." I submit that ought to be "any Senator voting on the prevailing side." That is the language of the former rule. A man may be on the prevailing side and not vote at all. I think the words "voting on" had better be inserted in place of the word "of" in the first line.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to saying "voting with the prevailing side."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is in the first line of clause 1, after the word "Senator," to strike out "of" and insert "voting with."

The amendment was agreed to.

The rule as amended was agreed to.

The next proposed rule was read, as follows:

RULE XV.

BILLS, JOINT RESOLUTIONS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

1. One day's notice at least shall be given of an intended motion for leave to bring in a bill or joint resolution, but in the introduction of bills or joint resolutions on leave such notice may be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

2. Every bill and joint resolution shall receive three readings previous to its passage; which readings shall be on three different days, unless the Senate unanimously direct otherwise, and the presiding officer shall give notice at each reading whether it be the first, second, or third.

3. No bill or joint resolution shall be committed or amended until it shall have been twice read, after which it may be referred to a committee; bills and joint resolutions introduced on leave, and bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives, shall be read once, and may be read twice, on the same day if not objected to, for reference, but shall not be considered on that day as in Committee of the Whole, nor debated, except for reference, unless by unanimous consent.

4. Every bill and joint resolution reported from a committee, not having previously been read, shall be read once, and twice, if not objected to, on the same day, and placed on the Calendar in the order in which the same may be reported; and every bill and joint resolution introduced on leave, and every bill and joint resolution of the House of Representatives which shall have received a first and second reading without being referred to a committee, shall, if objection be made to further proceeding thereon, be placed on the Calendar.

5. All resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

6. Every resolution of inquiry addressed to the President of the United States, or to the heads of Departments, shall, if objected to, be referred to the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such resolution; said committee shall report thereon within one week thereafter, and said resolutions shall be in order for consideration when reported.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the committee, to a suggestion in regard to the first clause of this rule. I never heard of an objection to the introduction of a bill or joint resolution. Still, of course, it may be convenient sometimes that such a matter should be postponed one day in order to give opportunity for preparation for what may be an important question—the reference of a bill. But under this rule and under the old rule of the Senate the thing which is most frequently done as of course in the Senate, that is the introduction of a bill or joint resolution, is done out of order by unanimous consent, and therefore the Chair, if he goes through the entire formula, has in every case to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate, and the clerks in journalizing the proceeding record that Mr. A asked and received unanimous consent to introduce without previous notice a certain bill.

Now why would not everything practical be accomplished by providing that whenever a bill or joint resolution is introduced, it shall, if objected to, lie over one day? That would secure everything that the present rule secures, and would avoid the long formula and the repetition of this statement in the Journal. I beg leave to move that amendment as a substitute for the first clause of Rule XV.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Will the Senator prepare his amendment?

Mr. HOAR. I will, if the Secretary will take it down. I propose to strike out the first clause of Rule XV and to insert:

Whenever a bill or joint resolution shall be offered, its introduction shall, if objected to, be postponed for one day.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Let the Secretary report the amendment. Perhaps some better phrase will be suggested.

The amendment was read.

Mr. FRYE. It seems to me that that is an improvement on clause 1 of this proposed rule; but on reference to the RECORD it will be found that in the last revision of the rules a report was made to the Senate striking out practically clause 1 for reasons given then as given now by the Senator from Massachusetts, and the then Senator from Maine, Mr. Hamlin, objected to striking out the provision, and said that in his experience he had known of two or three occasions where it was absolutely necessary or exceedingly important to invoke the rule. However I do not see but that the Senator's amendment still preserves all that is good in that clause.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I believe that my amendment preserves everything that is in the clause, good or bad. The practical result is precisely the same as now; it merely saves the long formula uttered from the chair and recorded in the Journal.

Mr. INGALLS. The first clause of the rule is founded upon a venerable fiction that has long since been abandoned. It was the custom in the early days of the Senate frequently to have the debate upon the subject-matter involved in a controversy occur when the motion was made for leave to bring in a bill. That was in the days when there were but very few members of the Senate, when it sat with closed doors, and when the debates were largely colloquial and conversational; but as the business has become public and conducted with open doors and the numbers of the Senate have increased, the whole practice has been entirely abandoned; and the reason for the rule having ceased, of course the rule itself ought to cease.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts meets with my entire approbation, and I have not the slightest doubt that even under it the privilege which may be invoked will not be called into existence within the experience of any man now in this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments to Rule XV as proposed by the Committee on Rules?

Mr. BAYARD. I was about to propose to strike out the new clause, clause 6, for which I can imagine no necessity whatever, and to which I can see very manifest objection.

In the first place, if a resolution of inquiry is offered it is always competent, under the present rules, for the Senate to commit it if they think it proper to be done. Every one understands practically that when a resolution of inquiry is offered and it is committed, that is an adverse action upon the resolution. Although by this provision you are to return it in a week and then make it open for consideration, that does not cure the case, because the week may contain the very time which is of essence for the purpose of obviating the information.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] not now in his seat made the proposition that the officers of the Cabinet should be here present on this floor for the purpose of being interrogated and of making their personal and verbal replies to inquiries respecting their various Departments. It is essential, more perhaps to the minority than to the majority, that this right of inquiry, the opportunity to obtain information in regard to public affairs, should be as unimpeded as the public interests will permit. I do not wish to see resolutions of inquiry, the only means whereby a minority can promptly avail itself of information in order to check action, impeded by a week's delay, which may effectually destroy that remedy.

This section of the rule is entirely new. It has never found its way into any of the rules of this body up to this time, and I hope now that it will not meet the approval of the Senate. There are times in legislation when prompt and immediate reply must be had from the officials in charge of the information desired. Under this proposed rule, as I understand it, a single objection would prevent the adoption of a resolution of inquiry, and would send it to a committee which can withhold it for a week and then indefinitely debate it.

I trust that there is no new cause for such a rule as this. There has been no abuse. The Senate may refuse to make the inquiry; the Senate may commit the resolution to any committee it pleases under our present rules; but this would place it at the mercy of any single individual to object to an inquiry being made, which might be very vital, and which should have immediate and prompt attention.

I submit to the Senate that such a rule is not wise, that it is not expedient, and I trust it may not receive the approval of this body. I therefore move to strike out the sixth clause.

Mr. INGALLS. It is not in yet.

Mr. GARLAND. We can take a separate vote on the different clauses. The sixth section is not yet in the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that this is a wise provision of the rules on the score of economy——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). If the Senator from Ohio will suspend, the Chair desires to understand what is the attitude of the question.

Mr. SHERMAN. The whole text of the rule, I understand, is subject to amendment, and a Senator may move to strike out any portion of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the entire report of the committee is before the Senate, and as there is nothing here which is proposed by the committee which requires to be inserted, the regular motion would be that suggested by the Senator from Delaware to strike out.

Mr. BAYARD. I beg pardon of the Senator from Ohio, but I have already made a motion to amend the rule by striking out the sixth section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Delaware to move to strike out section 6, when some Senator suggested that that was not in yet; and the Chair understood the Senator from Delaware not to press his motion in obedience to that suggestion; but the Chair understands that the motion of the Senator from Delaware was the proper one.

Mr. BAYARD. On the contrary, the Chair misunderstood me. I arose to emphasize my motion to strike out the sixth section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware moves to amend. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out clause 6 of Rule XV, as follows:

> 6. Every resolution of inquiry addressed to the President of the United States, or to the heads of Departments, shall, if objected to, be referred to the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such resolution; said committee shall report thereon within one week thereafter, and said resolutions shall be in order for consideration when reported.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I said a moment ago, I think the adoption of this rule on the score of economy would be advisable. I do not think in any other respect it is very material. No doubt it has been copied from one of the new rules adopted in the other House, where it has worked very well, but where it is much more imperative in form than the proposed rule as stated here.

Very commonly resolutions of inquiry are hurriedly written out and introduced, and they are generally favored, because, as the Senator from Delaware says, there ought to be the freest modes of communication between the executive and legislative departments of the Government. We call upon the President and the heads of Departments in a multitude of instances for information already communicated to us and lying on our table. In some cases large documents, sometimes extending to volumes, have been sent to us and published twice during the same session of Congress; and information actually transmitted to us in the regular annual reports has been called for by a resolution of inquiry before it could be printed, and when sent to us again has in the ordinary routine of business been ordered to be printed.

It seems to me, therefore, that these resolutions ought to go through some kind of examination or surveillance to see that they are properly expressed, that the resolutions do not call for information already communicated, and that they do not throw upon the executive branch of the Government a great deal of unnecessary labor and expense. I know from my own experience that large numbers of clerks have been sometimes kept copying from official documents information that had been previously in a somewhat different form communicated to Congress, thus creating an expense not only in the Departments but an expense in the Senate in printing, and largely adding to the cost of our printing.

It seems to me that it is a very moderate check upon the hasty introduction of these resolutions to provide that as they are introduced they must be referred to some appropriate committee; and here is a provision that such a resolution shall be reported back in one week, so that the Senate will have the power no doubt to act upon it.

With a view to promote economy it was deemed advisable to propose this rule, and I think it ought to be adopted. If it is found to be too restrictive in its character there will be no difficulty in changing it, but a great deal of unnecessary labor and a great deal of unnecessary expense would be saved by its adoption.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am very much surprised indeed at the remarks made by the honorable Senator from Ohio in placing, as I understood him, the whole ground of his objection to the motion of the Senator from Delaware upon the question of economy. Within the past week I have known two or three Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to rise in their place and ask for information from the Interior Department of the Government with respect to some matter touching the railroads, as to the amount of land grants, I think one of them was, of a certain railroad, and as to the action of the Interior Department touching its right to certain land grants. The Senator from Ohio well knows that legislation might have been pending in regard to which it would have been very important not only to the Senators seeking that information but also to the entire Senate to know what the facts were touching the case. He also well knows that the heads of Departments do not report in their annual reports that detail of information touching those questions which the Senators there asked for.

It seems to me it would be the most unwise proceeding to choke off any Senator, so to speak, from his right to ask for such information as would give him the necessary knowledge to vote intelligently upon any question brought before the Senate. This rule proposes to refer such a resolution of inquiry to a committee to take action upon it, giving them one week's time.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me to interrupt him, he will find that in the case he puts the proposed rule does not at all apply. The rule only applies where objection is made, and then it requires, where an objection is made, that a reference should be had to ascertain the character and nature of the objection.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In that case one member of the Senate, conceiving that he had an objection, would have the power in his hands alone, and without concert of action with any other Senator, to prevent action and to delay the information for one entire week. When such a resolution is put into the hands of a committee it may remain there for a week under this proposed rule, and it is then reported to the Senate and may be debated for a week or two weeks longer, and pending the discussion the important matter upon which the information was to bear may have been decided and out of the way entirely, and we be left entirely in the dark.

This proposition is the worst species of gag law that I have ever heard undertaken in this Senate Chamber. If there is any disposition on the opposite side of the Senate to prevent information, then no better plan could ever have been adopted than this one, which proposes to provide by an express rule of the Senate that action shall be suspended before the information so necessary and so important in many legislative matters can be even reached for the guidance of the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It seems to me that we have sufficient guarantees already in the good sense of the Senate with respect to resolutions of inquiry. I can not conceive of any necessity for a rule of this kind to guard against the intemperate or hasty action of so conservative a body as this. During the eight or nine years that I have been here I think I can say that I have never known a resolution of inquiry to go through in a hasty way. Such resolutions are very few in number ordinarily, and when a Senator gets up here and objects to a resolution of this description it lies over for a day or so and comes up again, and after it is adopted and goes to the Departments it may be that in the course of a month we get a reply. To hamper and restrict the powers of this body under existing rules or practice would be in my judgment very unwise.

I think the rule proposed is entirely unnecessary, because the Senate holds within its own hands the power to regulate the whole subject. If any Senator comes forward here with a resolution of inquiry which in its character is not proper to be addressed to the head of a Department or to the President, the Senate can put it down by its vote; it is open to debate, if necessary; the object and purpose of it can be disclosed. When it is proposed to refer a resolution of inquiry to a committee which may sit with closed doors, where the whole purpose of the matter may be debated in a very different way from what it can be done here, I think it is a change in the rule which ought not to take place.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to make one suggestion. As I understand it now every resolution of inquiry, if objected to, lies over one day and then comes up for consideration; and if a majority of the Senate think it ought to go to a committee it goes there. This rule provides that if one man the next day when it comes up for consideration insists that it shall go to a committee, although the whole body of the Senate might determine that it should not so go, it must go. That is the proposed change. As Senators have very well said, before the committee can meet the purpose of the inquiry may be at an end, for the legislation to be based upon the information may be passed upon. Why the whole body of the Senate should put it in the power of one man to send such a resolution to a committee I am not able to see.

Besides, the committee to whom the resolution may appropriately go, or a majority of them, may be absent from the city and they may be unable to obtain a meeting. If they do not report within a week, what is to be done about it? Is it then to come back whether they report or not, or is it to be withheld until they can meet? They may be able to give good reasons on account of the absence or the sickness of members for not having had a meeting within the time prescribed by the rule. Many embarrassments may arise. When it is now in the power of a majority to send such a resolution to a committee, surely the whole body of the Senate should not be deprived of the information desired because one man may desire a reference, with the chances taken of the legislation being over before the information can be procured, and when by reason either of the absence of members of the committee or sickness, or other excuses, they may be prevented from acting upon it at all.

Mr. INGALLS. There is some embarrassment resulting in my consideration of this proposed addition from the language of the third line, prescribing the committee to which the resolution is to go, the language being, "the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such resolution." Take the case of the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] this morning, which recited in the first place the decisions of a number of courts, including, I think, the Supreme Court of the United States, which may have been or may not have been correctly set forth. Then there was a further reference to certain statutes passed that incorporated certain railroads and endowed them with land subsidies. The resolution closed with a declaration that the public lands of the United States had been interfered with in some way by this judicial determination and by the action of the Interior Department. The question would naturally arise whether that resolution should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, to the Committee on Railroads, or to the Committee on Public Lands. I should hope the Senator from Maine would see fit, if he adheres to this proposed amendment, the wisdom of which I very much doubt, to change that language at least, so that the resolution should be referred to the appropriate committee, because properly speaking there is no committee in this body that has jurisdiction, in the proper sense of that term, of any subject-matter whatever.

While speaking on the subject I may suggest that, although there are reasons of considerable force why this amendment should be adopted, yet there are others that appear to me equally strong against it. It is very true that occasionally resolutions are offered here calling for information that is accessible in published reports of the officers of the Government on the files of the Senators or in the document-room, but whether or not the mere saving of dollars and cents that might result from the discovery of this fact would not be largely outweighed and overborne by the detriment that might occur by reason of the possible delay of one week when legislation was pending or great public matters were at stake is to my mind a matter of very grave and serious doubt, and until a stronger case is made than has yet been presented my opinion would be very strongly against the adoption of the proposed amendment to the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to strike out clause 6 of Rule XV.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the rule as amended.

The rule as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is now nearly 4 o'clock and we have progressed some distance in the rules. There is a very large number of nominations lying on the table, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Minnesota will be kind enough to withhold that motion for a moment, the Chair will lay before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives which is a matter of privilege.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Very well.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution, received from the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Monday, December 24, 1883, they stand adjourned until Thursday, the 3d day of January, 1884.

Mr. GARLAND. Let that lie over, to be considered in connection with the resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the doors are closed the Chair will consider a proposition that the Calendar be printed for the use of the Senate, as has been done heretofore at each session.

Mr. INGALLS. And I suggest, as has been done on previous occasions, that the Calendar be printed daily for the use of the Senate.

Mr. GARLAND. That was the last rule of the Senate on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection it will be so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 23 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY CORRESPONDENCE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith in response to the Senate resolution of the 18th instant a report of the Secretary of State and accompanying papers relating to the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed April 19, 1850.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, December 19, 1883.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives concerning the holiday recess.

Mr. ALLISON moved to strike out the words "Thursday, the 3d," and to insert "Monday, the 7th;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Monday, December 24, 1883, they stand adjourned until Monday, the 7th day of January, 1884.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 19, 1883.

The House met at 12 m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House of the election of Hon. ANSON G. MCCOOK as Secretary of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SCALES. I now call up the motion submitted by me on Monday last, and ask that the credentials filed at that time be now read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] now calls up the motion to administer the oath of office to Mr. Skinner, of North Carolina, and asks that the certificate of the governor be read. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Thomas G. Skinner, greeting:

We do, by these presents, commission you a Representative of the State of North Carolina in the Forty-eighth Congress of the United States of America, your election thereto from the first Congressional district of North Carolina having been duly certified to us, and do hereby confer upon you all the rights, privileges, and powers useful and necessary to the just discharge of the duties of said office.

In witness whereof His Excellency Thomas J. Jarvis, our governor and commander-in-chief, has signed with his hand these presents and caused our great seal to be affixed thereto.

Done at the city of Raleigh, on the 13th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1883, and in the one hundred and eighth year of our American Independence.

[STATE SEAL.] THOMAS J. JARVIS.

By the governor.

W. S. SANDERS, Secretary of State.

Mr. KEIFER. I offer for adoption, relating to this case, the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Walter R. Pool was, at the November election in 1882, elected a Representative to this House for the first Congressional district of North Carolina, composed of the counties of Currituck, Camden, Pasquotank, Perquimans, Gates, Chowan, Hertford, Hyde, Beaufort, Pitt, Pamlico, Bertie, Martin, Washington, Tyrrell, and Dare; and

Whereas by his death on August 25, 1883, a vacancy occurred in said district; and

Whereas since the election of said Pool as aforesaid the Legislature of said State redistricted that State for the purposes of representation in Congress, and created a new first district in said State, composed of the counties of Beaufort, Camden, Carteret, Chowan, Currituck, Dare, Gates, Hertford, Hyde, Martin, Pamlico, Pasquotank, Perquimans, Pitt, Tyrrell, and Washington; and

Whereas to fill the vacancy occurring as aforesaid the governor of North Carolina ordered an election in the said new first district, by virtue of which election Hon. Thomas G. Skinner now claims a seat in this House; and

Whereas to admit him to the seat would leave the said county of Bertie without any district representation in this Congress, and the said county of Carteret would be doubly represented: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the credentials of Mr. Skinner be referred to the Committee on Elections of this House, when appointed, with power to ascertain and report all the facts pertaining to this vacancy and the said election to fill the same at as early a day as practicable, together with the law governing the case.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask whether the credentials now presented are in due form.

The SPEAKER. The House has heard the certificate read, and of course it is for the House to determine whether it is in due form.

Mr. SCALES. I object to that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is undoubtedly in order. It is a resolution, as the Chair understands, to refer the matter to a committee.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] has not the floor to make objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is entitled to the floor on his resolution.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, the resolution just read is clearly in order, and is also in accordance with the practice, so far as I have been able to discover, in cases of like character through the entire history of this House. It is in order because it recites facts which are entitled to be taken into consideration in connection with the prima facie case, entitled to be taken into consideration as governing the law as applicable to all such cases.

The certificate, I beg to say, in the first place, is not the usual certificate. Indeed it cannot be called a certificate at all within the meaning of the rule that has prevailed here. I think I am quite safe in saying that there never was a case of this character presented in which such a certificate was brought before the House. It is perhaps a misnomer to call it a certificate. It is a mere formal commission. The fact that it bears date the 13th day of December, 1883, is suggestive that it has cost a great deal of trouble, a great deal of time, a great deal of mental anxiety to get up a paper which would come here and would not show what the law requires should be shown. All certificates which have hitherto come here, so far as I know, have recited the fact (where the circumstances warranted it) that the man came here to fill a vacancy. This is a mere commission, which does not undertake to show any of these things. The facts are recited in the resolution. Mr. Walter R. Pool was elected to this Congress in the old first district of North Carolina, the district composed of counties not the same as the new district. The certificate, if it is to be called such, ought to have recited the death of Mr. Pool and the fact that Mr. Skinner was elected as his successor; but it does not do that; it simply formally commissions Mr. Skinner as a Representative of the first district of North Carolina.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I assert as a fact—and if gentlemen are prepared to dispute the statement I will for the purpose of settling the fact yield to anybody—I assert as a fact that there never was a vacancy in that first district of North Carolina, and hence there could be no man sworn in to fill a vacancy. If gentlemen dispute that proposition we will settle the fact now. [A pause.] There is not to-day a vacancy in the first district of North Carolina, as is undertaken to be recited in the commission presented here for the consideration of the House, and there being no vacancy, no man can be sworn in to fill a vacancy. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES], who presents this certificate on behalf of Mr. Skinner, and who sits here with a perfect title to his seat, if another gentleman should come here with a commission reciting that he was commissioned for his district, mentioning it by number, would not claim that there was a prima facie case which bound this entire House to swear in the person presenting such a commission notwithstanding the seat was filled. Although the circumstances of such a case may not precisely agree with this, they are substantially in law and in fact the same as the case now presented.

But let us go to the law on this question of prima facie case, and assume for the purpose of the discussion, if you will, that this is a certificate in accordance with some law of the State of North Carolina. I wish to say that I have looked at the laws of North Carolina, and I first that the governor is authorized by the statute of the State to issue commissions to persons elected to the Congress of the United States. It is very unusual, but that would not be a guide where there was a commission issued for the purpose of filling a vacancy, as is claimed here.

But let us assume that this commission is regular in form; that the governor of North Carolina is justified in issuing it in this form, although he seems to have had a great deal of difficulty in coming up to it. The rule and the law that govern this body is that a certificate—or commission, if you choose to call it such—makes for the man holding it a prima facie case of election only. Why? Because the officer who is authorized to ascertain whether a man is elected has nothing before him but the returns of the election. The certifying officers—the returning boards, if there are such—only pass upon the votes cast; they pass upon nothing else; they do not determine the question of qualification or eligibility, or the question of a vacancy, or any question of that kind; and hence a certificate coming from such a board, and upon which a governor may act, can only be a certificate which would make a prima facie case of the things which came before the certifying officers, and nothing else.

And this is the rule laid down in the books and which has been followed in this House. I admit for the purpose of determining whether Mr. Skinner was elected in the district where he claims to have been elected—that is, whether he received a majority of the votes cast—that this commission, in view of the peculiar state of the law in North Carolina, is evidence that Mr. Skinner in the district in which he ran received more votes than his adversary, Mr. Pool. So I concede all the gentleman has the right under the law to claim under that state of the law; but the question is still open to be decided as to what goes behind and belongs to the prima facie case.

McCrary, in his American Law of Elections, a most excellent work, laying down the general proposition as to the effect of certificates or commissions, as the case may be, states in section 222 as follows:

> The regular certificate of election, properly signed, is, as we have seen, to be taken as sufficient to authorize the person holding it to be sworn in. It is prima facie evidence of his election and the only evidence thereof which can be considered in the first instance, and in the course of the organization of a legislative body. But there are questions which may be raised touching the qualifications of a person elected, which may be investigated and decided as a part of the prima facie case, and as preliminary to the swearing in of the claimant. Thus, if a specific and apparently well-grounded allegation be presented to the House of Representatives of the United States that a person holding a certificate of election is not a citizen of the United States, or is not of the requisite age, or is for any other cause ineligible, the House will defer action upon the question of swearing in such person until there can be an investigation into the truth of such allegation. It is necessary, however, that such allegation should be made by a responsible party; it is usually made, or vouched for at least, by some member or member-elect of the House. It is to be presented at the earliest possible moment after the meeting of the House for organization, and generally at the time that the person objected to presents himself to be sworn in. The person objected to upon grounds such as these is not sworn in with the other members, but stands aside for the time being, and the House, through its committee, with all possible speed, proceeds to inquire into the facts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before reading further I desire to say that I wish to discuss this question on the facts recited in the resolution, because I am warranted in saying, not alone on my own authority, but on the authority of the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina who has presented this certificate on behalf of Mr. Skinner, that the facts are stated correctly in the resolution; but if there is any dispute as to the facts the gentleman is present, and let him make his statement now, so we may have no question hereafter about the facts upon which this case rests.

I will now read a further paragraph from McCrary's book on this same question of what is a prima facie case:

> The certificate of election does not ordinarily, if ever, cover the ground of the due qualification of the person holding it. It may be said that by declaring the person "duly elected" the certificate, by implication, avers that he was qualified to be elected and to hold the office. But it is well known that canvassing officers do not in fact inquire as to the qualifications of persons voted for; they certify what appears upon the face of the returns and nothing more. The certificate, therefore, must be regarded as evidence of the election of the person named therein, so far conclusive that it can not be attacked except in the ordinary mode provided for contesting, but it is not evidence of the qualifications of the person named.

It seems to be settled, Mr. Speaker, not alone by recognized authority, but in cases of some importance determined by Congress.

The first case occurred in 1850, and is commonly known as the Perkins New Hampshire case. That case presented precisely the question which we now have here before us. In every respect the question is precisely the same. The objection was made that the credentials should be referred to the Committee on Elections, and the House so directed (as appears by McCrary's work on elections), and the case at once went to that committee.

The next case was one from the State of Louisiana, and there the prima facie case on a question was referred to the Committee on Elections, and a report made from that committee, before any further action was taken by the House with reference to it. These cases, Mr. Speaker, are similar in principle, and mainly in fact, to the case which is before the House for its present consideration, and I shall have occasion to refer to them in another connection during the course of this discussion.

I will not overlook the question that was made in 1880, I believe, in the House, when my honorable colleague, Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, who is also a member of the present House, presented, I believe through Mr. MCKINLEY of Ohio, or possibly through Mr. Townsend, Mr. MCKINLEY arguing the question, a certificate of election, and asked to be sworn in at the bar of the House. At the time that certificate was presented here it recited, what it should have recited, that Mr. TAYLOR was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of President Garfield. The honorable gentleman from Ohio, Mr. HURD, and I do not now see him in his seat, was then in Congress, and, when the certificate was presented, made a motion to refer the credentials of Mr. TAYLOR to the Committee on Elections. There was some discussion then upon the question as to whether or not he was entitled to be sworn in upon the naked prima facie case presented by the credentials. But all of the facts in that case were before the House at the time. Mr. HURD made his usual able, insidious, close legal argument, his purpose being to show that Mr. TAYLOR could not take his seat under the certificate presented, because he was elected from the old nineteenth district of Ohio, whereas after the election had been held the Legislature of the State of Ohio had amended the law, redistricted the State, and changed the old nineteenth district in some respects. Mr. HURD made his argument, and claimed that because there had been a change in that district in Ohio, because the old district in which the vacancy had occurred was no longer a lawful district in that State, there could be nobody elected from such district, and the question was raised and brought to the attention of the House that during that Congress that particular district must go without representation to the end. But after some discussion, and the citation of several cases bearing upon the subject—precedents which were numerous—Mr. HURD very kindly withdrew his objection to the swearing in of Mr. TAYLOR, who was accordingly sworn in, after the House was fully advised of all the facts connected with the case; and thereafter, for the purpose of making a question and ascertaining whether or not Mr. TAYLOR had been properly sworn in, his credentials were referred to the Committee on Elections, which committee, I believe, or I had been under the impression, was unanimous in holding that the action was proper and regular; but I have been since informed that one gentleman, perhaps, had some doubt upon the subject.

That was in the Forty-sixth Congress; but that, Mr. Speaker, could not be cited as a precedent for the swearing in of Mr. Skinner on this certificate or commission from the governor of the State of North Carolina which he presents here to-day. There was finally no objection to Mr. TAYLOR'S being sworn in. There is an objection in the present case.

We have already, Mr. Speaker, other precedents, as I have stated, numerous precedents bearing upon this question. We are making them right along ourselves, and we are going to make precedents rapidly now. Therefore it is a matter of the highest importance that we should make them right as we proceed, for we do not know who or where they will hit in the future. The death of Mr. HASKELL, of Kansas, will bring us face to face with a similar question when a man has been elected to fill the vacancy which has been occasioned by his death.

In the last Congress Hon. Mr. Allen, of Missouri, a member of this body, died and left a vacancy from that State. Governor Crittenden, the executive of the State, issued his writ for a new election to fill the vacancy, and, I believe, provided that the election to fill that vacancy should be held upon the day fixed by law for the regular election of members of the Forty-eighth Congress. Mr. McLean, of Missouri (and if I am wrong some gentleman present who is more familiar with the facts can correct me), was a candidate for election in the old district from which Mr. Allen had been elected, because Governor Crittenden directed that the election should be held in the district in which the vacancy occurred, and not, as here, in a district in which a vacancy never did occur. He also directed that the election, or issued his proclamation to that effect, should be held at the time when the election for members of the present Congress was held. Mr. McLean, as I have said, was a candidate in the old district in which he lived for a seat in the Forty-seventh Congress to fill the vacancy, and I believe Mr. BROADHEAD was his opponent. He was also a candidate against Mr. BROADHEAD for the present Congress, the Legislature in the interval having redistricted the State. Mr. McLean was elected from that old district by a few votes. He came here and without objection presented his certificate of election in accordance with the proclamation of the governor of the State of Missouri, and, without objection, was sworn in and took his seat as a member of this House. He was defeated, it is claimed, I believe, for election to the present Congress. I am simply referring to this as a settled precedent on this subject.

It is fair to say that there is one precedent in which the House decided this matter the other way. That is the Perkins New Hampshire case of 1850, where there had been a change territorially in the district after the resignation of a gentleman from one of the districts in New Hampshire. That case, however, was referred to the Committee on Elections, and there was a report in favor of Mr. Perkins, who was elected in the new district, and on a very close vote in the House Mr. Perkins was seated. The latter fact is stated on the authority of McCrary's work on elections (section 169), but there seems to be some error in the name of the person admitted.

Since that time the matter has undergone a great deal of discussion, and the criticism on the action of the House on that case, and especially of the Committee of the House, has been very abundant. That criticism has come from all sides of the House, and I have not since that time, I believe, heard any gentleman undertake to maintain that the decision was sound.

The next case was one that was fully considered—the Louisiana case in 1869. A gentleman named Hunt presented his credentials from Louisiana. He was elected from the old district. That case was referred to the Committee on Elections, and there was a report which, so far as I have been able to examine the case, I believe was unanimous in favor of seating Mr. Hunt. There the whole of the former case was reviewed, the partisanship that had entered into its decision was considered, and Mr. Hunt was admitted to his seat. I may as well read from the work most convenient for me what is said upon the case, and which is better said than I can state it. I read from page 168 of McCrary's work, section 179. Mr. McCrary says:

In the case of Jared Perkins, of New Hampshire (1 Bartlett, 142), the following facts appeared: On the 2d day of July, 1846, the State of New Hampshire was divided by an act of her Legislature into four Congressional districts, and in March, 1849, a Representative in Congress was chosen from each of said districts, and the gentlemen so chosen took their seats as members of the Thirty-first Congress. In July, 1850, by another act of the Legislature said State was redistricted, and the boundaries of the several districts changed. In September, 1850, Hon. James Wilson, who was the Representative from the old third district, resigned. A vacancy having been thus created, the governor ordered an election to be held by the new third district to fill it. At this election Mr. Perkins was chosen. There was a majority report from the Committee of Elections in his favor, and after debate in the House he was admitted to the seat by the very close vote of 98 to 90. There are grave reasons for questioning the soundness of this decision. Let us suppose, for example, that after an election by a district it is divided into two equal parts and one-half placed in one new district and the other half in another. If under these circumstances a vacancy occurs, by which of the new districts shall it be filled? Or we may suppose that the territory composing a district may be distributed among three, four, or a half a dozen new ones. In such cases there is no sound principle upon which to determine which, if any, of the new districts shall fill a vacancy which may occur from the old. The true rule, therefore, must be that a district once created, and having elected a Representative in Congress, should be allowed to continue intact for the purpose of filling any vacancy which may occur until the end of the Congress in which it is represented.

Further, in section 180, Mr. McCrary says:

The case of Jared Perkins, supra, was expressly overruled in the more recent case of Hunt vs. Menard (2 Bartlett, 477).

In this latter case the committee said—I may be pardoned for reading it, for it states the case well for our purpose here:

The act of the Legislature of Louisiana of August 22, 1868, making a new division of the State into its five Congressional districts, by its terms purports to repeal all laws and parts of laws in conflict with said act, but is silent on the subject of vacancies that might occur in the districts as then existing.

The language of the minority report in the case of Perkins on the New Hampshire statute is appropriate on this point as well as on this case generally, and we quote from it as follows:

"It does not purport to provide for any method of filling vacancies that might occur in the future, and beyond all question it was understood as providing only for the election of members of future Congresses. Such are the terms of the act, and such must also be its spirit. A vacancy in the House of Representatives is the occurrence of an event by which a portion of the people are left unrepresented, and the filling of that vacancy is directed by the Constitution in such explicit language as requires no aid from State enactments to perfect the right.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will not read further. This whole review by the distinguished judge who prepared this work is in support of the proposition I make.

Mr. BELFORD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether this district was established prior to the election?

Mr. KEIFER. It was established prior to the last election and after the regular election for the members of the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. BELFORD. Then it was not established before this gentleman was elected?

Mr. KEIFER. It was established before Mr. Skinner was elected to the Forty-eighth Congress, and after Mr. Pool was elected to the Forty-eighth Congress, Mr. Pool having died in the mean time.

The effect, Mr. Speaker, of admitting Mr. Skinner to the seat is as recited in the resolution, to give to Carteret County, in North Carolina, a double representation, that county having participated in the election of a present sitting member and having been allowed to participate in the election of Mr. Skinner. And while we are jealous that our brethren in other districts should not have any more political power or political representation than we have, we ought to care less about that, very much less about it, than we care about the question of leaving an entire county in any State without any representation at all, as would be the case with the county of Bertie, in the State of North Carolina.

That county has not participated in the election of Mr. Skinner or any other district Representative from the State of North Carolina. The outrage rests more heavily there than it works wrong by the mere matter of allowing a county to help elect two or more Representatives.

The Constitution of the United States speaks on this subject, and, if properly interpreted, it speaks aright upon it. Primarily, in the formation of our republican form of government, representation was guarded so that it was to be taken away from no person. And so jealous were the framers of the Constitution upon this subject, that they provided in the Constitution itself a mode by which, without legislative action at all in any of the States, vacancies could be filled. Section 2, article 1 of the Constitution reads as follows:

When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

It was regarded by the friends of the Constitution important to provide for filling vacancies, and they excluded even the idea of legislative power, where it is assumed to have been exercised, to provide for filling a vacancy in one district by the election of a Representative from another district.

Originally—and it is a curious piece of history—originally the draught of the Constitution of the United States was so that it would hardly have left room for doubt or cavil as to what was its meaning. In the original first draught of the Constitution of the United States, before it went to the committee on style—for that committee made the Constitution at last in many respects—this was the form of this clause in a different connection—

The House of Delegates—

That is before they had named this the House of Representatives—

The House of Delegates shall exclusively possess the power of impeachment, and shall choose its own officers, and vacancies therein shall be supplied by the executive authority of the State in the representation from which they shall happen.

It was so specific in terms that even here, where we are very apt to be refined about many things, to allow substance sometimes to give way to mere forms, and allow principles to go sometimes in order that we may work out partisan ends—even here that would not have been questioned.

But this original draught of the Constitution went to the committee on style. The first time the committee on style reported it reported this portion in the form of section 7 of article 4 of the Constitution, not changing it very much. I will read it as they then reported it:

Vacancies in the House of Representatives shall be supplied by writs of election from the executive authority of the State in whose representation from which they shall happen.

I wish gentlemen to note that the word "representative" is not used in the Constitution now, nor was it ever used in the framing of the Constitution. The word there used is "representation," and, as was said on the floor of the body which framed the Constitution, they used that word in reference "to the state of being represented," not the matter of having a number of representatives from a State, for they were looking to the State being represented, and they used the word "representation" in its proper sense.

Representation means the people in that sense. And where there was a vacancy in the representation from the people the governor of the State was authorized to issue his writ to fill the vacancy in that representation. It may include representatives; but the primary idea was that they should see to it that there were no people without representation in the halls of Congress.

Now this same committee on style went to work again, without a new discussion ever arising about it, and in order to put, as they supposed, the language in better form and at the same time express the same idea, they reported finally the Constitution of the United States, changing the form of this expression and left it less clear what they meant, unless we go back to the discussion which led to the adoption of this clause in the Constitution.

Without any comment and any word in the redraught, they put the clause in the Constitution as it now stands and as I have read it. Section 2, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States provides—

When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancy.

It is the representation that the governor is to see that writs are issued to fill vacancies in. Such is the Constitution, and the meaning of it is clear. It was so framed as to put a guard and security around all the people, so that they should be represented in the Congress.

I deny, Mr. Speaker, in the light of this clause of the Constitution, that it would be within the power of any State to issue through its executive authority a writ, though authorized by statute, to fill a vacancy that had occurred in one district by authorizing an election in another district wholly or partly outside of the original district.

Mr. Speaker, this House had a memorable case before it many years ago—I think it was from the State of Pennsylvania—where the Legislature, through some oversight or neglect or believing that no law was necessary, had failed to provide any mode for filling a vacancy in the House of Representatives. There was no legislative authority from the State for issuing any writ, there was no law directing how the governor should fix the time and place for filling a vacancy in the representation in the Congress of the United States. But the governor of the State, acting under his constitutional power under the Constitution of the United States, did issue his writ, did fix a time and place for filling the representation from a district in which a vacancy had occurred. The man came here with his certificate, confronted with the fact that there was no law of his State authorizing an election to fill the vacancy. But this House said the Constitution was the supreme law, and it contained an injunction upon the executive of a State to issue a writ; and that carried with it everything incident to it, including the power to fix the time and place for filling the vacancy in the exact district where the vacancy occurred; and the House swore in the man here, as it ought to have done, to represent the district where there was a vacancy.

[See McCrary on Elections, section 176.]

Mr. BELFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to put to him a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. BELFORD. Suppose that a Congressional district is created by a State Legislature, which has a perfect right to create such districts, and that John Jones is elected to represent that district. Suppose that during the lifetime of John Jones the Legislature, which has an absolute and unqualified power to district the State, redistricts it. John Jones dies, and a man is elected to Congress from a county that did not constitute the original Congressional district. Why is not that within the power, full and complete, of the State; and why is not the man so chosen a representative on the floor of this House of the people of the new district?

Mr. KEIFER. Well, Mr. Speaker, the reason is that the man so chosen is a representative of the people of a new district, and the new district never had a vacancy in this House to be filled by anybody. I am trying (and that is the whole burden of my talk) to convince the gentleman from Colorado, and everybody else if possible, that there can be no such thing as filling a vacancy in that representation from one district by an election in another. I assert that the representation is to be supplied by an election on the part of the people who were deprived, by death in this case, of a representative here; and in the light of the Constitution and in the light of principle it can not be filled in any other way.

We violate the cardinal principles, all of them, if we undertake to say that this man can be sworn in and one of the counties of North Carolina go without representation through this Congress. We violate a fundamental principle, and we can not afford to do it. This question will present itself to us very soon in other cases. Of the members who were elected at the regular election in 1882 to this Congress six, I believe, have gone to their graves. The question is presented and now comes here in two cases; but death may sweep through the States of Maine, Pennsylvania, New York; there may be still other cases from North Carolina and from Kansas. We do not know how soon the question may come up again. Before we decide it is right that this man should be sworn in we ought to consider and deliberate upon the question; we ought to let it go to the Committee on Elections, that in their committee-room, in the light of deliberation and discussion, in the light of precedents and principles, they may bring us in a report upon which we can stand when the question comes here upon filling the vacancy in the representation from the district which the distinguished gentleman from Kansas, Mr. HASKELL, was elected to fill. In that State at the election in 1882 three of the Representatives were elected in districts and four were elected at large. In the State of Maine, I believe that State losing one Representative under the new apportionment, the whole four were elected at large. Suppose that death or resignation should make a vacancy there, will the gentleman tell us what district would fill the vacancy?

Take the State of New York with its numerous members, or the State of Pennsylvania, each of which elected a member at large. Suppose the member elected at large should resign or die, what district in the State of New York or Pennsylvania would fill the vacancy? Take the case of Mr. BENNETT, of North Carolina, who was elected at large. Suppose he should die or resign, what district would fill the vacancy there? I am told that a still stronger illustration might be given from the State of North Carolina. The distinguished Representative from that State [Mr. VANCE], long in Congress, comes here from a new district—number nine. There was no number nine before this Congress. His county has gone into a new district with a large number of other counties, all of which belonged to other districts at the time Mr. VANCE was elected, as I am told. Now, if he should die or resign would only one of those counties participate in electing his successor, or would eight or ten others in the new district participate? As Mr. McCrary has stated in his work on elections, you should look to see who are the people who are deprived of representation in this Congress, and the governor should direct precisely as was done in the cases in Missouri, Louisiana, and Ohio with the vacancy, by letting the people vote who elected in the first instance.

Now, if you carry out to its logical and technical conclusion what is proposed in this case, then every member from the State of North Carolina now upon this floor has no district to-day, and had no right to appear at the bar of the House and be sworn in. They came here violating the rule suggested in this case. The reason why they might have stated in this wise: "Our districts have been taken away from us; the law under which we were elected has been repealed. We are not entitled to be sworn in, because the Legislature of the State of North Carolina has changed our districts, changed them for all future time, beginning with the passage of the law. So, then, we have no districts to represent." This in view of the course now proposed would have been what the gentlemen from North Carolina should have stated when they were called up to be sworn in. They are now here representing districts which have been created under a law which has been repealed according to their own theory, and are not entitled to represent the new districts which are to be represented. That is the effect of the proposition in every new district if the course suggested in Mr. Skinner's case be now adopted.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is well enough perhaps to combat the idea—it is wise to do it in my judgment—that under the law of North Carolina there ever was a repeal of the law authorizing the election of members in the first instance to the Forty-eighth Congress. Now, the original act provided for filling vacancies. The act redistricting the State for the decennial which ended with 1880 has never been repealed. The provision is found in that act, as I have already stated, for filling vacancies which may occur in representations in Congress, and that provision has never been repealed. In the act redistricting the State for future Congresses there was no intention, no purpose, and no design to repeal that provision of the old law. It was allowed to stand for the purpose for which it was originally enacted, and applies to the election of members to this as well as to the Congresses which preceded it in the last decennial period. There was no attempt to repeal that law; but it was allowed to stand and operate until the expiration of the last Congress to which members under it were elected.

It was passed on the 6th of March, 1883, and after the time when the term of the members regularly elected to this Congress began. It did not undertake to repeal the old law, and therefore we do no violence to the law authorities of the State of North Carolina if we hold to the position that that law was in force for the purpose of filling the vacancy occasioned in the representation of the old first district of that State. The question is one of great importance. We are really doing justice if we go back to the old rule. We do justice thereby to the county, which otherwise would be without any representation at all. We do no injustice to the counties which participated in the election, or to those which participated in the election of a Representative at large. We are doing no injustice to this district, but only putting it on a par with others.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have made this statement for the purpose of having members understand the importance, not only in this case, but generally to carry out the purpose of the framers of the Constitution, that vacancies in representation shall always be filled by those who elected the member in the first instance. It is also for the purpose of showing that my resolution is not based upon mere technicality, but upon broad constitutional principle, a principle underlying our republican form of government. Therefore it is no violence to ask that the gentleman who presents himself to be sworn in under these circumstances shall have his case go to such an honorable Committee on Elections as will be constituted by the Speaker, and let them deal with all these questions and decide what should be done; to decide it on right principles, so that we may have a precedent hereafter for our government in similar cases.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I will reserve that time to answer, if necessary, what may be said on the other side.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that so much time has been taken up on the merits of this case. The gentleman from Ohio has consumed all this time in presenting facts and discussing questions which do not touch and should not affect the motion which I have made.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman from North Carolina permit me to have another certificate from North Carolina read for the information of the House?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield the floor?

Mr. SCALES. I do not yield.

Mr. HISCOCK. This is a certificate from the same district.

Mr. SCALES. What, Mr. Speaker, is the case presented before us? At a general election held in the State of North Carolina in November, 1882, Mr. Walter R. Pool was elected a Representative in Congress for the first district. Before the organization of the Congress Mr. Pool died. A writ of election was issued in due course of law to fill the vacancy. Due notice of the election was given. Regular conventions were held by both parties and regular candidates nominated by each. The election was held, the returns were made, and the canvassing board met on the 13th of December last. My friend from Ohio who has just addressed the House says that there is some suspicion in the fact that this certificate was signed on the 13th day of December. The canvassing board met on the 13th of December. They acted on the 13th of December, and the Representative duly chosen at that election being here without his certificate and Congress in session, the executive of North Carolina, as he should have done in the premises, signed the certificate at the very earliest moment after the board had acted. Mr. Skinner therefore comes here as one of the Representatives of the State of North Carolina. He comes here and presents his credentials as the ninth member to make up the full quota to which the State is entitled.

My friend from Ohio says that there is no great violence to him in submitting this matter to the Committee on Elections. But, Mr. Speaker, it is a great violence to the people of the State of North Carolina. That State is entitled to have her full representation of nine members on this floor, and I presume when her Representative comes here, armed and equipped as he comes in this case, with a certificate from the proper officer of the State, with the great seal of the State affixed and in the form provided by law, that the Representatives in this House from other States seated on like credentials will not reject him and consign him and his case to the committee and leave his State in part unrepresented.

But my friend from Ohio says that this commission is not a certificate. Mr. McCrary in his admirable work on elections says it is a certificate or a commission. A commission is a certificate. The one includes the other. In that certificate, which is now filed before this House, it is expressly declared that Mr. Thomas G. Skinner has been elected from the first district of the State of North Carolina, and the governor of North Carolina in pursuance of law commissions him to act as the Representative of that State upon this floor.

Is there anything else in this commission? No, sir. Then can you go behind it? You can not, sir, unless by the method, as my friend to my right suggests, of eight to seven, which is above law.

We insist upon the prima facie case. We insist that Mr. Skinner has been elected from the first district, because the State of North Carolina says so through her governor, who is authorized by law to make such a statement. We insist that he should take his seat, because he presents such a commission, and you can not go behind it. But the gentleman from Ohio says there is no vacancy. I assert that there was a vacancy. The commission of the governor says that there was an election there; it is a matter of public notoriety that Hon. Walter R. Pool died, that his death made a vacancy, that an election was held, and, as I have said, the certificate of the governor says that T. G. Skinner received a majority of all the votes and was duly elected in that district.

The gentleman presents a long statement of facts outside of the record. Where is his evidence that they are true? The same witnesses that proved those facts prove that there was a vacancy, and if his facts are true he is estopped from denying to him a vacancy, because his whole case is predicated upon it by the public conduct of the governor. Let me suppose a case: A vacancy occurs in a district. The governor of the State, in great caution, calls to his aid the law officers of the State and other counsel learned in the law. He wants to proceed strictly in accordance with the law, and issue a writ to hold an election to the proper district. They examine the law and search all of the precedents that Congress has made. They find there is but one precedent, and I assert it boldly here and defy contradiction.

What is that? That is the New Hampshire case known as the Jared Perkins case, and is in all respects the identical case we have here to-day. The question was whether the old or new district should elect.

They find a writ of election was issued to the new district, just as it was here. There had been some slight change in the new district from the old, just as it is here. The election was held, and the Representative-elect is here. He came with a certificate in proper form and signed by the proper officer and presented it; he was seated without question. That is just what the governor of North Carolina did in this case. He was sworn in upon that certificate, and it is the identical case that we have here; and all we ask is that you treat North Carolina as you did New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, if there is lurking in the mind of any gentleman a doubt as to whether the old or the new district should elect, I would say to him let Mr. Skinner be sworn in and then send the case to the Committee on Elections.

In this way you vindicate the action of the House in the New Hampshire case. Have the case examined and decided, and in the mean time give to North Carolina her proper quota of Representatives on this floor.

It is not necessary to take up the time of the House in reading that New Hampshire case unless some gentleman desires it. If so, I will send it to the Clerk's desk for that purpose, that all may see that in all respects it is our case. There is no statement, it is true, that the Representative-elect from the new district was sworn in, but I find the following resolution when the case was finally decided upon its merits:

Resolved, That George W. Morris is entitled to the seat which he holds as a Representative from the third Congressional district of New Hampshire.

This shows conclusively that pending the contest he was in his seat. But more than this, he was not only seated on the prima facie case, but the whole case went to the committee, was decided upon its merits, and the committee reported that the new district was the proper district; and the House adopted the report by a vote of 98 to 90.

There are but two cases given in the law in which you can go behind the certificate. One of them is when the member seeking his seat is not eligible under the law, and the other is where the certificate itself contains something on its face which destroys it. Nobody claims that either of these questions arises in this case.

Mr. Speaker, the only other case cited as a precedent by the gentleman from Ohio is the Louisiana case—Hunt vs. Menard. I admit that the committee agreed there that the old district ought to elect, and not the new. In the New Hampshire case the committee and the House both agreed that the new district ought to elect, and not the old. But in the Louisiana case the committee reported that there was no election, not only because the election was held in the new district but also because of fraud and intimidation in the election, and the House in voting voted upon the report as a whole, and no one can say whether that decision was based upon the fraud and intimidation or because the election was held in the wrong district. This, then, is no precedent.

I now beg to call the attention of members to a case which arose in 1880, and I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to be as liberal in this case as his colleague was in a case similar to it. In 1880 the Hon. EZRA B. TAYLOR was elected to fill a vacancy in Mr. Garfield's district. He was elected from the old district and at the meeting of Congress presented his credentials here. Mr. HURD, of Ohio, believing that he had no right to his seat objected, and asked that the case be referred to the Committee on Elections. The Legislature in Ohio, just as was done in North Carolina in establishing the new districts, had, it was believed, repealed the old ones. This was done before the vacancy occurred, as in our case, and hence there was no legal districts in the State except the new. It was asserted by old members of the House, among others Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, who sat just in your front, sir, that a prima facie case had been made out, and that Mr. TAYLOR should be sworn in and the case could then go to the committee.

Mr. HURD, at the instance of Mr. Stephens and others, withdrew his objection, and Mr. TAYLOR was sworn in.

I send to the Clerk's desk a volume of the RECORD for December, 1880, and ask him to read the places marked on the one hundred and third and one hundred and fifth pages for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MCKINLEY. I submit that the objection raised by my colleague [Mr. HURD] certainly ought not to operate to prevent the swearing in of the member-elect on his prima facie case. If there be any force in the objection made by my colleague, such objection should go to the Committee on Elections, but the member-elect in the mean time should not be deprived of his seat on the floor of this House.

* * * * * * *

And again upon page 157 McCrary on Elections we find the following:

"The principal and almost the only case in which the lower House of Congress has ever denied to a person holding regular credentials the right to be sworn and to take his seat, pending the contest, is the celebrated New Jersey case (1 Bartlett, 19). In that case one set of claimants held the regular certificate of election signed by the governor, and another set held the certificate of the secretary of state that they had received a majority of the votes cast in their respective districts. After a long and angry debate the House (being yet unorganized) refused to admit either set of claimants to their seats. Subsequently, and after a partial investigation, the holders of the secretary's certificate were admitted to seats pending the contest, and at the end of the contest these persons were confirmed in their seats. This precedent has never since been followed in a single instance. It is so clearly wrong, and as a precedent so exceedingly dangerous, that the House has not hesitated to disregard it entirely on every occasion when the question has arisen."

* * * * * * *

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I think the question before the House is a very plain one, both as to the law and the precedents. During my experience here I do not remember an instance where, when the credentials were presented in due form, the member was not sworn in. There was one exception, perhaps, but it was not exactly an exception in point, where the member from Colorado came with a certificate in due form, and that certificate referred to the statute under which the election was held in Colorado and the member was elected, thereby making the statute a part of the certificate itself. It there became the duty of the House to look to that statute, and see whether it had been complied with and the election held on the day provided in the statute for the election being held for a member to this House.

* * * * * * *

But look to the dangerous consequences and effects upon the House itself and upon the country if gentlemen who come here with certificates in due form should be rejected even for an hour instead of being sworn in upon their credentials in due form, and whatever matter may be objected to referred in proper form to the Committee on Elections for investigation. To follow the course suggested in this case would be exceedingly dangerous. The whole complexion of the House might be changed where there was only one or two majority for either party if, on the simple allegation of any member the election has not been held in conformity to law, the member presenting himself to be sworn in could be prevented from taking his seat.

* * * * * * *

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish merely to state, Mr. Speaker, that I agree to every word the gentleman from Virginia has uttered. It seems to me to be a case that is perfectly plain. I have been here many years, and I never knew but the single exception the gentleman has stated where a member was not sworn in on a prima facie case if there was no contest, and I agree with him in trusting the objection will be withdrawn and the member from Ohio sworn in.

Mr. SCALES. Now I want members to recollect that that was a case the same as this, excepting that the member then presenting the certificate was from the old district. I ask now to read a few extracts from McCrary on Elections with regard to the commission and prima facie case:

It is enough for a prima facie case if the certificate comes from the proper officer of the State.

That fact is conceded in this case.

Where the statute gives the governor of a State the power and makes it his duty to commission the person elected to an office—

As it does in this case—

the issuing of a commission by him confers a vested right upon the person commissioned, which nothing but a judicial decision can take away or authorize the governor to recall.

Mr. McCrary again says:

The principal and almost the only case in which the lower House of Congress has ever denied to a person holding regular credentials the right to be sworn and to take his seat pending the contest is the celebrated New Jersey case.

And he says in regard to that case that the action of the House was "so clearly wrong, and as a precedent so exceedingly dangerous, that the House has not hesitated to disregard it entirely on every occasion when the question has arisen," and that this was done in the interest of a full and proper representation from each State.

There can be no doubt but that a certificate of election, regular in form and signed by the proper authority, constitutes prima facie evidence of title to the office, which can only be set aside by such proceedings for contesting his election as the law provides.

I might go on and read further extracts equally as strong and equally as positive. But the law and practice is all one way, and I will not waste further time. Mr. Skinner shrinks not from investigation. He is willing and invites investigation if gentlemen desire it. But in the mean time let the State have her representation in the person of Mr. Skinner.

I now yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, their Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. 31) to authorize the payment of the salaries of the employés of the two Houses of Congress on the 22d instant; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

PAYMENT OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman to yield to me that I may make a motion. I desire unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and passed a joint resolution from the Senate regulating the payment of the salaries of the employés of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 31) authorizing the payment of the salaries of employés of the two Houses of Congress on the 22d instant.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay the employés of the two Houses of Congress their salaries for the current month on the 22d instant.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read three times, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I hold that in this case the gentleman whose credentials have been read is entitled to the seat, first, on the prima facie certificate. That point has been perfectly and conclusively settled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES], and I need not refer to it further. But he is also entitled to his seat upon the merits of the case.

The Constitution of the United States divides the subject of the election of members into two branches. The first power is that which pertains to this House. This House is authorized to "judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members." But so far as the districts are concerned, the places where members are to be elected, the Constitution has given the power to the States, the provision being—

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

The Constitution has reserved to Congress the right to change the places of choosing Representatives; but that right on the part of Congress has not been exercised in this case; hence the places fixed by the Legislature of North Carolina are the only places in which elections of Representatives to this body can be held.

The new code of North Carolina contains the act under which this election was held. It was passed March 6, 1883, and enacts that—

For the purpose of electing Representatives to the Congress of the United States the State of North Carolina shall be divided into nine districts, as follows.

The act then proceeds to give the districts, and concludes with these words:

This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

That act repealed the former act with regard to the election of Representatives in Congress, and was the only law on this subject in force in the State of North Carolina when this election was held. It therefore is binding upon this body as to whether the Representative should have been elected in the new or the old district.

In addition to that I desire to refer to the action of this House in a case from Iowa in the Forty-sixth Congress, where the question was as to the time of holding the election; and, mark you, the "times, places, and manner" are all covered by the same clause of the Constitution. In that case the State of Iowa had held an election in October, when it was claimed by many that the proper day for the election was in November. But this House decided that the governor of the State was the proper authority to determine what the law and the constitution of that State were in that respect. The Committee on Elections of that Congress, in a report signed by Mr. William A. Field, then a member of this House, but now a judge of the supreme court of Massachusetts; by Mr. J. WARREN KEIFER, lately Speaker of this House, but now simply a member, just as the rest of us are; by Mr. WILLIAM H. CALKINS, of Indiana, and several other gentlemen whose names I need not read, took the ground that the State was the judge as to the time at which the election should be held; and if as to the time, also as to the place. In that report it was held that it thus became the duty of the governor to determine the meaning of the constitution of Iowa in the particular mentioned.

And this was done by him as the only authority in Iowa which under the constitution and the laws of Iowa had a right or was charged with the duty of determining, and it was done in the performance of an official duty which could not be avoided. It is the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States that the decisions of the highest judicial court of a State upon the meaning of the State laws and constitutions, when its decisions are uniform, are binding on that court.

Further, this committee in the Forty-sixth Congress cited a case from Tennessee, reported in 1 Smith's Digest, and affirmed the decision in that case. The report in the Tennessee case was made by Mr. George W. McCrary, the author of the work on elections; and the Committee on Elections at that time embraced as members Mr. McCrary, Mr. EUGENE HALE, now a Senator from Maine, and Mr. LUKE P. POLAND, now a Representative on this floor from the State of Vermont.

These were the leading Republicans. On the Democratic side I see the name of Mr. Michael C. Kerr, than whom no higher authority was ever cited in this House on such a case. I also notice the name of Mr.

Clarkson N. Potter, of New York, lately deceased. Those gentlemen held in the case coming from Tennessee to which I referred that it is a well-established and salutary rule that where the proper authorities of the State government have given a construction to their own constitution or statute that construction should be followed by the Federal authorities. This rule is absolutely necessary to harmonize the working of our complex government, State and Federal. The committee therefore recommended the adoption of the resolution which allowed the time for voting in that State to be decided by the State authorities for themselves.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I only ask a moment longer.

Mr. SCALES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. This rule, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, settles the question raised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] as to what ought to be the construction by the State. His speech would have been all right for the governor of North Carolina when he was about to issue his proclamation calling the election, because it was a State question entirely as to what should be the places where the election should be held. But that State through its own authority, the governor, having decided the election should be held in the first district under the new law of Congress, that decision is binding on this House. And the election of the honorable gentleman is an election in accordance with the law of the State of North Carolina, and he ought to be sworn in immediately as a Representative from that State.

Mr. SCALES. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes.

Mr. SCALES. I yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, there is but one question to be decided by this House, and that is whether the certificate presented by the member from North Carolina is a substantial compliance with the law. The questions pertaining to the merits so fully discussed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] are questions that it is not competent for this House now to determine, because on the question of the sufficiency of the certificate the decision is ex parte. But when we come to decide on the merits, according to the well-established law of all civilized people, both sides must be heard. We can not therefore on the arraignment of the gentleman from North Carolina and the testimony he has given us to-day decide this question, not even as to whether we will refer the case or not. There are rights which are supported alone by presumption, and the great body of the rights we enjoy every day of our lives are rights which stand alone on the support of presumption. A man is protected in the enjoyment of personal liberty by the presumption with which the law invests him when he is innocent of crime. He inherits the patrimony of his fathers by the force of the presumption that he is the legitimate descendant. And I might go on and enumerate all of them.

Then, in advance of the investigation of a right contested, there is a right presumed when a member comes to this House and asks for a seat here, or when one comes anywhere to be inducted into office in the United States—Federal, State, or municipal. And this is not an exceptional case we are trying, for the same law which pertains to a member of Congress pertains to a sheriff or alderman whenever he is clothed with a certificate of the proper officer authorized by law to certify that in accordance with the forms of law he has been elected, and he is then entitled to exercise the functions of his office until a proper tribunal can investigate the merits as to whether some other has a better right than he has.

Now, sir, this position has not been called in question in this House by any of its decisions; it has been a number of times by the presentation of the individual opinions of gentlemen upon this floor. But outside of that portion of the history of this House just after the war, when passion instead of judgment dominated its counsels, there is not a decision to be found in which the House has departed from that line of precedents.

I am going to read to you now from the utterances of Mr. McCrary, the distinguished writer on the law of elections, which has been quoted by the gentleman upon the other side, and which bears upon this subject.

I read now from section 209:

> Where the statute gives the governor of a State the power, and makes it his duty, to commission the person elected to an office, the issuing of a commission by him confers a vested right upon the person commissioned, which nothing but a judicial decision can take away or authorize the governor to recall.

In section 210 he says:

> The person duly commissioned must exercise the functions of the office until, upon an investigation upon the merits, it is judicially determined otherwise.

Again, in section 213 he uses this language:

> And this ruling is according to the weight of authority in the House, while it has the support not only of reason and sound policy but of an almost unbroken line of judicial decision, extending far back through our history as a nation.

In section 221 the same author says:

> There can be no doubt but that a certificate of election, regular in form and signed by the proper authority, constitutes prima facie evidence of title to the office, which can only be set aside by such proceedings for contesting the election as the law provides.

In section 223 it is said:

> The certificate, therefore, must be regarded as evidence of the election of the person named therein, so far conclusive that it can not be attacked except in the ordinary mode provided for contesting, but it is not evidence of the qualifications of the person named. The presumption always is that a person chosen to an office is qualified to fill it, and it is never incumbent upon him to prove his eligibility. The certificate of election does not add to this presumption, but simply leaves it where the law places it, and he who denies the eligibility of a person who is certified to be elected must take the burden of proving that he is not eligible.

Cushing, in his Parliamentary Law, bearing upon this subject, says:

> The right to assume the functions of a member in the first instance and to participate in the preliminary proceedings and organization depends wholly and exclusively upon the return or certificate of election, those persons who have been declared elected and are duly returned being considered as members until their election is investigated and set aside, and those who are not so returned being excluded from exercising the functions of members, even though duly elected, until their election is investigated and their right admitted.

This refers to a Massachusetts case in 1784:

> Where, in a petition against an election, the member returned was charged with having obtained his election "by bribery" and by corrupting the minds of as many as he could by spirituous liquors and by other improper and illegal methods, and evidence was offered in support of the charge, it was held that the House had no constitutional right to suspend the member from acting as such until the matter of the charge had been heard and determined.

I have a number of other quotations from Mr. McCrary, but the time allotted to me being very brief I will not attempt to read them. It is sufficient to say that throughout the whole of the article bearing upon this subject he lays down the doctrine, and supports with a uniform line of decisions, that where a member comes to this House with a certificate properly authenticated it is a document which entitles him to be sworn in and take his seat and assist in the organization of the House. Now, would not this gentleman in the present case have stood upon an equal footing with any of the other members of this House if the gentleman who presents this certificate of the governor of North Carolina had submitted his certificate at the opening of this session of Congress and asked to be sworn in in order to participate in the organization of this House? He comes here with a certificate which is full and clear upon its face. There could not, therefore, have been any distinction in the rights of one member over those of another. We stand precisely upon equal footing. Suppose, then, that this member had come here at the organization of the House with the certificate; it can not be seriously questioned that he would then have had the same right that every other member of the House has under the law of Congress to act with those of us who had rightful and undisputed certificates and who alone are authorized to organize the House. I know that it has been customary at times for one gentleman to get up here and arrogate to himself the right to determine whether a member shall be sworn in or not upon the certificate he presents, but it is the exercise of a power nowhere conferred by law. There has got to be a House to determine all such questions, and how is there going to be a House until the members who have certificates are sworn in for the purpose of organizing? There can only be a House when there has been an organization by the election of a Speaker to preside over the body and invoke its will and decisions. There can only be a House when there is a Clerk appointed in accordance with the Constitution and the laws of the country to write down its Journal and write up the record of its decisions.

The House is invested by the Constitution with power to determine who is elected and who shall participate in its decrees; but until the House is organized, each member who presents a proper certificate is a unit of its power, and has a right to unite with the other members on this floor in its organization, and nobody can deny that right. Now, I repeat, if the gentleman who has this certificate had been here at the organization of the House he would have had the right to take part in that organization and could have voted for the officers of the House, and there is no power here to destroy that right. If it may be said that he had no such right, and that he stands or stood in the organization of the House upon a lower plane or footing than the other members, then there is a difference between the certificates of the members. Such a position could not be tolerated for a moment.

During the Twenty-ninth Congress three vacancies occurred. After the first session Mr. McConnell died, Mr. Yancey resigned, and Mr. Yell, of Arkansas, went into the war which was then prevailing against Mexico. Colonel Yell was killed while gallantly leading a charge at Buena Vista, one of the most gallant and glorious in the history of our country. The names of those absent members were still upon the roll of the House.

This House had no information that they were dead or had resigned, and when their successors presented certificates of election from the governors of their respective States, stating that they had each been elected to fill such vacancy, some one said the records of the House do not present any evidence that there is a vacancy. It appeared from the records that the names of these parties were still upon the roll. But this House said we have the certificates of the governors of the States that there are vacancies, and that such vacancies have been filled in accordance with the terms of the law. The holders of the certificates were duly sworn in.

In the course of the debate upon their admission Mr. Schenck said:

> The immediate question to be resolved is the right of Mr. Newton to take his seat at this time upon the credentials which he has presented. He thought there could be no reasonable doubt of that right; certainly none if respect was to be paid to the uniform practice of the House in all time heretofore.

And again—

The prima facie case in such instances had always been considered sufficient and conclusive as to the right to take the seat, whatever might follow afterward upon the question as to whether a vacancy had existed to be filled or not. The State determines that for itself and sends the successor, and the House acts upon the weight of presumption which then arises in favor of the member-elect.

The certificate, in other words, is prima facie evidence of the right of the applicant to be sworn in. Then if there comes up any question as to whether such State has transcended its power in apportioning members of Congress or in any other respect, that must go to the regular committee. If there is a contest, that must go to the committee. Both sides must be heard, testimony taken, witnesses brought on each side, and the compulsory power of the law invoked if necessary to secure this attendance. Each must have a trial surrounded by all the guarantees of the Constitution, and when the committee has made its report the House must determine the question upon its merits.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it in order to offer a substitute?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] has the floor.

Mr. SCALES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD].

Mr. BELFORD. In the blazing light of the nineteenth century I think the Republican and Democratic parties can afford to be honest. We have endured, as the fortunes of parties have alternated, a large number of political outrages; they have been practiced on both sides, and it is idle to conceal their commitment.

What is the question before the House to-day? Here comes a member with a certificate duly signed by the governor in proper form and shape, avouching and attesting the fact that he has been elected a member of this House. He produces the same evidence to the Speaker and to the members of this national council that I presented or you presented and upon which the House acted. It is my deliberate judgment that he should be sworn in upon that prima facie case; and I care not whether he is Democrat, Greenback, or Republican. [Applause.]

If the evidence of his election is not sufficient to justify the Speaker in swearing him in, where is the evidence that is more supereminent in respect to the claims of any other member? I am not willing at this time to discuss the legal question presented by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], although I think it is unsound and that his view can be refuted upon purely logical reasons. But I say if we set ourselves up to ignore, refuse, and repudiate the certificates issued by the governors of our respective States, and which inform this House that we have been chosen as members to represent the sovereign people, we are committing a most woful mistake, into the bosom of which I for one on this side do not propose to drop. Therefore I say that so far as I am concerned I will vote for the admission of this gentleman, because he has a certificate as valid, as tangible, as substantial as the certificate of any other member on this floor.

Mr. HISCOCK addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] still has the floor.

Mr. SCALES. I yield to the gentleman from New York to offer his resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. I send to the Clerk's desk what I offer as a substitute for the pending resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thomas G. Skinner be sworn in, and that it be referred to the Committee on Elections, when appointed, to report at the earliest practicable moment whether the said Thomas G. Skinner was elected from the first Congressional district of North Carolina as created before the last Congressional apportionment of Representatives in Congress or from a district in North Carolina created in that State since the election of Walter R. Pool, deceased, and to further report whether in the judgment of said committee said Skinner was elected from the proper district.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to discuss this question at any considerable length.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from North Carolina to yield the floor entirely?

Mr. SCALES. Only for this resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire only five minutes and hope the gentleman will yield me that time.

Mr. SCALES. I am under promise to another gentleman to give him the balance of my time. That I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD]. [After a pause.] As I do not see Mr. HURD present, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK. I hold, sir, in my hand the certificate of Walter R. Pool, deceased, to fill the vacancy occasioned by whose death Mr. Skinner was elected.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HISCOCK. As it is claimed, at least. The fact, I know, is disputed.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman will yield to me I will say that he has the certificate of Walter R. Pool, who was regularly elected at the election of 1882 and died.

Mr. HISCOCK. We will say it is alleged that it is to fill the vacancy created by his death that Mr. Skinner was elected. These certificates are precisely in the same form. They are identical in purport. I understand the certificate of each member of the North Carolina delegation is in the same language as that of the certificate which has been issued to Mr. Skinner.

I sympathize most earnestly with the remarks made by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] that it is dangerous to question the prima facie right of any man to a seat on this floor. When there is a vacancy in the delegation from a State and a certificate comes here in the usual form as the certificate from that State, I for one am unwilling when the gentleman presents himself here to be sworn in to question at the outset his right to be sworn in. And if gentlemen on the other side are willing that this case should go to the Committee on Elections charged with the investigation of the only question indicated by the substitute and instructed to report as soon as practicable, that will meet my views of this case and of the situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. SCALES. I yield that time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD].

Mr. HURD. The only question presented in this discussion is, shall the gentleman from North Carolina be sworn in pending the investigation into the character of the certificate he presents? As has been said by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], in the Forty-sixth Congress I objected to the seating of Mr. TAYLOR, successor to General Garfield, who had been elected from the old district. I maintained in the argument on that occasion that he could not be elected from the old district because the law which created it had been repealed, that he could not be elected from the new district because General Garfield had never represented that district, and by his resignation, therefore, he could occasion no vacancy in it, and that the only way in which an election could be held to fill such a vacancy as that was under the provisions of an act of the Legislature which should continue the old district for the purpose of filling a vacancy until that Congress had expired.

I am still of the opinion that I maintained then. But at that time I withdrew the objection, because there was a doubt as to whether a prima facie case had been made by the certificate which had been presented, and desiring to resolve the doubt in favor of a Representative of my State, I asked that the gentleman from Ohio be sworn in. That request was granted unanimously by the House of Representatives, and Mr. TAYLOR was sworn in. That case makes a precedent exactly fitting this, by which this case should be governed. Therefore I maintain that Mr. Skinner should be now sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. MAYO. Will the gentleman yield me two minutes?

Mr. SCALES. I will yield the floor.

Mr. REED. I ask the gentleman to yield to me the three minutes he has remaining.

Mr. SCALES. Certainly, I will do so.

Mr. REED. I will reserve that time and endeavor to obtain further time from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] after he has concluded.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to occupy much more time, and after a few words will yield to gentlemen, some who agree with me and some who differ from me.

I wish to say in reference to the basis upon which the substitute is offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], as I have already stated, that he seems to have been entirely at fault in the matter of his information. Walter R. Pool was the man who was elected at the regular election in 1882 and afterward died. He furnished his certificate of election to the Clerk of the House, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] now has it before him. The other gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Skinner] comes with a certificate of a like character here from the present first district of that State.

I have no doubt about the law as it is laid down. I have no doubt about the precedents. I wish to say that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES], who is always fair, has overlooked the other precedent from Louisiana, which is entirely in opposition to the New Hampshire precedent. He has overlooked the precedent set in the Ohio case on the merits of the case. He has overlooked the precedent which was set in the last Congress by the action of the governor of Missouri, and perhaps there are others which received no particular notice.

But as there seems to be a great division of opinion, and while I regard it as a very dangerous precedent, to which I offer my protest, I will say that I am entirely willing to withdraw my resolution and offer it again, if the gentleman will allow me, after Mr. Skinner has been sworn in, as it does not refer to the prima facie case, but refers the whole matter to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. SCALES. So far as I am concerned I prefer a vote on the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. KEIFER. Very well; I will yield now to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], and afterward decide upon what I will do.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, there can be no question transcending in importance a question of this character. There are no questions which demand so much care in order that we may go aright.

This question is one liable to recur at the beginning of every decade. It is the question whether, a Representative having died representing a district under an old apportionment, that district as constituted by the old apportionment shall elect his successor or whether a new district which did not know him shall elect a successor.

It was very natural that in the early times there should be some question upon this point. It was decided by the House in the New Hampshire case a great many years ago that the new member should be elected from the new district. Since that time, however, new light has been thrown upon the question by repeated and continual discussion.

Since that time the public mind, the mind of the two Houses of Congress, has settled in the other direction; that is, that the old district, and not the new district, should be represented by the member elected to fill the vacancy; and for an obvious reason—and all the reasoning on the subject is in a nutshell—for the obvious reason that under our system we have a representation of all of the people of this country and of every acre of territory of this country, so far as it is formed into States. That is, we have not only a representation of all the men, but of all the territory, all of the territory and all of the men in it.

Now, it almost invariably happens that the new district is not territorially and constituently, if I may use the word, the same as the old. Hence it results that some portion of the State would be doubly represented, and some portion of the State would not be represented at all, if the member elected to fill the vacancy was elected by the new district and not by the old. To my mind this is conclusive upon the merits of the case.

The other alternative which was presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] in the Forty-sixth Congress, that the constituency should go unrepresented if no provision was made by the State Legislature, in my judgment and in my experience has found no advocate except himself.

[Here the hammer fell.

The SPEAKER. The three minutes of the gentleman have expired.

Mr. REED. I had three minutes from the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] and I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to yeld me five minutes more.

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe I am entitled to the floor upon my substitute, and I will yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] all the time he wants from my hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine will proceed.

Mr. REED. Although I have touched upon this question on the merits of the case, I have done so simply to put those of us right who take the view which I am about to express. I would not have it for a moment misunderstood what we think upon this question.

The real question before the House, however, is not what I have discussed. The real question is of a prima facie case. Now, in order to enable this body to be organized, it is absolutely essential that it should be organized under some general principles and under general laws.

All general laws are liable to injurious exceptions, but all general laws are sustained by the fact that in the great majority of cases they prescribe a wise rule, and whoever overturns that rule on account of unfortunate exceptions makes the great mistake of upsetting a thousand good cases in order to rectify one bad one.

In this case we have established the rule by a long series of decisions, decisions which in the long run have commended themselves to the judgment of learned men in the Houses of Congress for many years past. The principle is that, whenever a certificate signed by competent authority declares in unequivocal terms that a man has been elected to the House of Representatives, we respect such a certificate and allow the man to be sworn in, and then, if necessary, proceed to examine his case.

In this case, here is a certificate of the governor of North Carolina in the same form as the certificate upon which every other member has taken his seat, in the same form as that upon which every member of the Forty-seventh Congress took his seat. It is a declaration that the man was duly elected from the first district of North Carolina. Now the question is, which first district, the old one or the new one? There is one principle which underlies all certification, and it is that a public official is presumed to do his duty. No republican or other government can go on upon any other presumption. It may be that in a particular case the official violates his duty; but the presumption on which we must go in the prima facie case is that he has not violated his duty. The presumption also is that if he makes a certificate which by its terms covers the ground, it is intended to cover the precise ground. In other words, if in this case the governor says "the first district," it seems to me the presumption must be that he means the legal first district, which is entitled to representation here.

Mr. Speaker, I submit there is but one course left for us to pursue, and that is to swear this man in. I am sorry on some accounts to come to this conclusion, because I believe that after the long series of decisions on the part of this House there ought not to have been any question in the mind of the governor of North Carolina as to his duty in the premises; and were it not for two facts I should be inclined to characterize this as a fraudulent transaction. Those facts are, first, that honorable gentlemen contend that the governor of North Carolina was right as to the district he chose; and the House of Representatives a great many years back seems to have come to the same conclusion. But I sincerely hope that we may be plagued no more by questions of this kind; that we may go on and faithfully do our duty, presuming that others have done theirs; and when upon examination it is found they have not done theirs, I trust that without fear, affection, hope of reward, or party discipline we shall do our honest duty in the premises.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Three minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS].

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, the difficulty in my mind in this case has been whether the election upon which Mr. Skinner claims a seat was not absolutely void, whether this House was not bound, under the public law of North Carolina and the certification made by the gov ernor, to take notice of the fact that the election was held in a district in which there was no vacancy. I believe so yet. Adopting the argument of my friend from Maine [Mr. REED], I agree with him in everything he has said except in his position that this House ought not to examine into the prima facie case where the certificate appears perfect upon its face. That, it seems to me, is sacrificing substance to form. In this case it is perfectly evident to every one that this House must take notice of the public law of Congress which fixes November in every second year as the time for the election of Representatives from North Carolina. The election took place at that time. We have been officially informed that the person then elected has since died; it is upon record by the statement of the Clerk. This certificate comes here supplemented by these official statements; and it is the first duty of the House to examine the paper in connection with the public law and see whether this man was elected from a district in which there was a vacancy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, on this question I stand where I did in the beginning. I agree with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and other gentlemen who say that the certificate or commission imports honest action on the part of a public official; but I deny that such action reaches further than is stated by the distinguished writer upon public law Mr. McCrary, who says that it only goes to the extent of determining that there was an election—nothing else. But, Mr. Speaker, seeing the temper of the House on this subject I am willing to withdraw my resolution after the protest which I have made; and when the gentleman has been sworn in I propose to reoffer a resolution omitting the preamble, leaving only that part of the resolution which refers the case for examination to the Committee on Elections. I hope this proposition will be satisfactory to the gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. SCALES. I object.

Mr. KEIFER. I propose to withdraw the resolution to let the gentleman be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] withdraw his substitute?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman has no right to object under the rule.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not object; but I know no reason why a vote may not be taken on my resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] proposes that Mr. Skinner be sworn in, and that then the matter be referred.

Mr. KEIFER. I propose to withdraw the resolution for the present, but after Mr. Skinner has been sworn in I will again offer it.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] desires to have a vote on his proposition, and if the gentleman from Ohio withdraws his resolution the substitute of the gentleman from New York will go with it.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly, as it is offered in the nature of an amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not particular how it is done, but I wish to refer the question to the Committee on Elections, to be reported on at the earliest practicable moment. If, in the course that is pursued, that shall be preserved, I am content.

The SPEAKER. The resolution being withdrawn, the gentleman from North Carolina will come forward and be sworn in.

Mr. Skinner, of North Carolina, accompanied by Mr. SCALES, appeared at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HISCOCK. If I may be allowed, before the gentleman is sworn in, I wish to say that I understand there will be no objection after the gentleman has been sworn in to a vote on my proposition.

Mr. SCALES. To your resolution; no.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair understands.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina, was then sworn in by taking the oath prescribed by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I offer again my resolution, leaving out the preamble.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the credentials of Mr. SKINNER be referred to the Committee on Elections of this House, when appointed, with power to ascertain and report all the facts pertaining to said vacancy and said election, to file the same at as early a day as practicable, together with the law governing the case.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire whether the words in that resolution, "all the facts relating to said election" do not carry the merits of the question to the committee? If so, I object.

Mr. KEIFER. It ought to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think we ought first to have a report on the legal question.

Mr. KEIFER. The prima facie case has been already decided.

Mr. SCALES. Let it all go to the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. That leaves this case, and the House may as well understand it, so that a report on it may be postponed to the last days of the Forty-eighth Congress. I believe this preliminary legal question ought to be disposed of and this disputed point settled before we go to anything else, and if my resolution is before the House I insist on a vote on it.

Mr. KEIFER. The prima facie case is gone.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not ask to refer the prima facie case. But, Mr. Speaker, I do ask to refer to the Committee on Elections to report on certain facts at once. I believe the question which has been stated by the gentleman from Ohio will come up again in the case of Kansas, and therefore I believe the Committee on Elections should report immediatly on the question we have been discussing all the morning. Therefore I demand a vote on my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers his resolution as a substitute for the one pending. The vote will first be taken upon that.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman from New York will not insist upon his resolution. This contemplates two reports from the Committee on Elections after the prima facie case has been determined by the House. It seems to me that when the whole case goes, as this resolution contemplates, to the Committee on Elections, it must be acted upon as any other case is acted upon, and there is no just reason in my judgment to take it away from the committee or adopt any other course, nor is there any reason to ask for two reports from the committee after the prima facie case has been settled.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED. Let the substitute be again reported.

The proposed substitute was again read.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, before the House is called upon to vote on that resolution I desire that it shall understand that they are only referring under that substitute the mere legal question as to whether Mr. SKINNER was entitled to represent this new district instead of the old one. Gentlemen upon the other side of the House very properly and kindly say they are willing that the whole case shall go there as the prima facie case has gone.

I wish to say also to the members present that there is a contest over this seat. Mr. Pool, a brother of the deceased, Mr. Walter R. Pool, makes a contest for the seat. All that I ask, therefore, is that the ordinary proceedings had in such cases shall be observed here, and that the matter be referred to the Committee on Elections, as all such cases have been referred. It is the ordinary rule to refer the whole case to the committee, just as this resolution contemplates. The gentleman from North Carolina says there is no objection. The gentleman from New York, on the contrary, desires by his resolution to refer only the question of law growing out of the election in one or the other of the districts, as the case may be. It would be an act of injustice to the contestant in this case to submit any other question to the Committee on Elections than the general question raised by my resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. My reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio is this: That if there is a contest in that district and Mr. Pool is the contestant for a seat here, under the rules of the House that goes to the Committee on Elections to investigate and determine. If he is here asking a seat upon this floor, that request goes to our Committee on Elections for it, in due course, to report upon. The resolution which I offer does not foreclose him in the least or in any manner impair his right. But what I want a report upon from the committee is upon this troublesome question that has been presented to us year after year and session after session. I want authoritative action on the part of the House. I do not want that question to be postponed until the last days of this Congress, when it may be intruded upon us at a time when its merits can not receive that attention from the House which the importance of the case demands.

Mr. SCALES. I understood the gentleman from New York to say that he had no objection whatever to the form of the resolution if the whole thing went to the Committee on Elections. Now, I have stated already that I have no objection to the whole question going to that committee——

Mr. KEIFER. That is just what I propose.

Mr. SCALES. So that that committee can report upon the whole question.

I move the previous question.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I presented the resolution which has been read from the desk to the House to the gentleman from North Carolina now upon the floor for an expression of opinion upon it. He read it and submitted it to a gentleman in the seat beside him——

Mr. MILLS. The demand for the previous question embraces that resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. And after the gentleman from North Carolina had heard the resolution he said it would be acceptable as I read it to him.

Mr. MAYO. Let me ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, I do not want any action of this body which may have its foundation in mere partisanship or any other source to deprive the House of the opportunity of settling this vexed question and allow a man to hold a seat in the House until the very last days of the session, as has been done before. I think right and fair minded men on the other side of the House will agree with me——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SCALES. The gentleman from New York has seen proper to make something of an attack upon me, and I desire an opportunity to make a brief response.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SCALES. Then I withdraw the motion for the previous question.

Mr. REED. This, Mr. Speaker, is merely a question of understanding on the part of the House, which has always been permitted to be discussed. It is not, properly speaking, a debate upon the proposition.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman insists upon the previous question, and objection is made to discussion, the Chair has no discretion but to recognize the demand of any gentleman for the regular order.

Mr. SCALES. I withdraw the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina now withdraws the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SCALES. I desire to do so for the purpose of saying, in reply to the gentleman from New York, simply this: He came to my seat while the discussion was proceeding and presented a resolution to which he called my attention. On reading it I then thought it carried the whole case to the Committee on Elections. I said that it would be acceptable to me in that form after the Representative had been sworn in. I also understood him to say that he did not care about the form of the resolution, and was willing to accept the original resolution provided it carried the case to the Committee on Elections.

I did it in good faith. I said I was willing to submit to that. I am willing to submit to that now. I think it is the right of Congress. And why? Because if that resolution goes it settles the whole question. If his resolution goes, as I now understand it, it carries the question as to the district, and if the report is in favor of the new district it has to go back on the other question. Therefore I think it should go to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. HISCOCK rose.

Mr. SCALES. I move the previous question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will not do that just yet.

Mr. SCALES. I yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. HISCOCK. On account of some discussion which had taken place on this side of the Chamber I called attention to the fact that I cared nothing for the order in which this thing was done. As between the gentleman from Ohio and myself I had no pride of opinion whether his resolution was adopted or mine. But I did state that I expected this question would be sent to the Committee on Elections to be reported on as soon as practicable; and therefore no objection was made from any gentleman on this floor, and the gentleman was sworn in. And you, Mr. Speaker, understood I forebore to press a vote on my substitute because I understood there was a unanimous agreement in this House that that resolution or a resolution in form carrying this question alone to the Committee on Elections should be passed.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; and the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. 31) authorizing the payment of the salaries of the employés of the two Houses of Congress on the 22d instant.

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SCALES. I call the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] for the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 107, noes 96.

Mr. COBB and others called for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. MILLS. I understand the request for the yeas and nays has been withdrawn.

Mr. RANDALL. It has not been withdrawn.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 47.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 108, not voting 96; as follows:

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. COLLINS until further notice.

Mr. J. D. WHITE with Mr. BLACKBURN until January 20.

Mr. MILLARD with Mr. POST until January 3.

Mr. HARDEMAN with Mr. KELLEY until after recess.

Mr. SHELLEY with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. ELLIS with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. H. H. HATCH until further notice.

Mr. BROADHEAD with Mr. WADSWORTH until further notice.

Mr. PAYNE with Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, until Monday.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. WADSWORTH on this vote.

After the second roll-call the following proceedings took place:

Mr. GEORGE. I did not hear my name called. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote has not been recorded. It has been the practice of the House to allow a gentleman to have his vote recorded after the second roll-call if he states he did actually vote or that he was giving attention but did not hear his name called. Was the gentleman giving attention?

Mr. GEORGE. I was giving attention, but did not hear my name called.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall have to object on that statement.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Oregon states he was giving attention and did not hear his name called.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not so understand his statement.

Mr. HISCOCK. So I understood him. Let the gentleman state what he did say.

Mr. GEORGE. I stated, or at least intended to state, that I was present and was paying attention and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. Of course the rule is very clear that the Chair can not allow a gentleman to vote at all under any circumstances after the completion of the second roll-call; but gentlemen can ask unanimous consent to vote.

Mr. RANDALL. There should be a rigid adherence to the rule. I object.

Mr. KEIFER. But, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the rule to be read, so that there may be no misunderstanding upon the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

Upon every roll-call, the names of the members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, then the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair.

Mr. KEIFER. Pardon me for a moment. If there is such confusion in the House that a member giving attention can not hear his name called, or if anything prevents his doing his duty in voting, it has been the practice, ever since this rule was adopted, to give him the opportunity to vote, if the failure on his part to vote is not in any sense attributable to his own neglect.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated; but still, under the rule, it requires unanimous consent to do so.

Mr. CANNON. Allow me a moment, for this is a question of some importance. The precedent as heretofore established has allowed members to vote under circumstances similar to those stated by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. GEORGE]. Now, if it be in the power of the Clerk—not assuming for a moment that in this case the Clerk has done so or would do so—if it be in the power of the Clerk to prevent a member from voting by omitting to call or indistinctly calling his name, what will be the result? It is not in order for any member to interrupt the roll-call. Suppose that the Clerk by accident omits to call the name of a member, then by the rule is his right to vote to be denied him?

It is to be presumed that the Clerk did omit to call his name, because the gentleman states that he was giving attention and did not hear his name called.

Mr. RANDALL. If we have rules we had better adhere to them. What are the circumstances in this case? The gentleman states that he was in his seat and listening. There was one call of the roll. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the clerk who called the roll has a clear, distinct voice, which penetrates to every part of the Hall. Then there was a second call of the roll.

Now, I am entirely impersonal in this matter. There was a second call of the roll, and the name of the gentleman was again called. There is no allegation that his name was not twice called. It is in contravention of the rule to permit a vote to be given under such circumstances.

We may as well meet this difficulty at once, because the question constantly arises during a session of Congress. That is the reason why we favor a rigid adherence to the terms, the letter and the spirit, of the rule, which is a correct one. It requires that a member not responding to his name upon the first call of the roll shall be careful to have himself recorded on the second call, if he desires to vote.

Mr. REED. I entirely agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that we ought to follow the rules of the House, whether those rules be wise or unwise. If we do not like them then we should change them.

On the other hand, every rule of this House is the subject of construction, and must be construed with sense, and must be construed in the light of the rights and duties of members. Now, members have the right to vote, and it is their duty to vote. If any member has done everything that he can in order to exercise that right, then he brings himself within the reasonable construction of the rules of this House.

That is not only sense, but it is sense tested by experience, for ever since the rules were adopted the construction of this rule has been given which is warranted and demanded by the situation of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. GEORGE]. He says that he was attempting to hear his name called, did not hear it, and therefore did not vote. Now, I submit to this House that a reasonable, sensible construction of the rule gives him the right to vote.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has alluded to the experience of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Allow me to make one suggestion in reference to the statements of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. GEORGE] and of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. If the gentleman from Oregon was listening when the first call of the roll was made and failed to hear his name called, then it was his duty to notify the House of the fact and to insist upon his name being called.

Another suggestion. The tally clerk is watching the call of the roll as well as the reading clerk; and if the name of any member was omitted by the reading clerk the tally clerk would immediately have called his attention to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that under the rule he has no power to allow the gentleman to vote.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has said something about our experience in this connection. The rule which has been quoted was introduced into the body of our rules because of the difficulties which we had experienced.

Before this rule was adopted I have witnessed roll-calls here when, after the names had been called and before the result was announced, members were hunted up from various places and brought in here and voted so as to change the actual result as at first ascertained. Now that was what we desired to avoid, to escape from, because it was found to be not conducive to public good and public approval.

I have no objection to any interpretation or construction which the Speaker may see fit to place on this rule; but if he does place a construction on it let us adhere to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the rule is open to misconstruction. The language is very plain and very emphatic. Under the rule a member can not be permitted to record his vote after the second roll-call has been completed, unless by unanimous consent. Of course the House by unanimous consent can permit anything of this kind to be done, no matter what the rules may say.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Macon, of North Carolina, when Speaker of the House of Representatives, decided that a Representative in Congress could not be deprived of his constitutional right to vote. This is a right that concerns his constituents on this floor, and upon any question affecting it the most liberal construction should be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Macon, when he made that decision, was Speaker of the House, and simply held that no rule of the House could deprive him of his constitutional right to vote as a representative of his constituency, although occupying at the time the position of Speaker.

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand, all objection is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to remark that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. GEORGE] may by unanimous consent record his vote. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The name of Mr. GEORGE was then called, and he voted in the affirmative.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, one word——

The SPEAKER. There is nothing for debate before the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. One point, I think, has been overlooked. The manner in which this comes before the House—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question has been disposed of.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I beg the Chair's pardon. One word——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the Chair has no discretion except to proceed with the regular order of business.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The substitute offered by the gentleman from New York having been agreed to, the question is now upon agreeing to the resolution as amended by the adoption of the substitute.

The resolution as amended was adopted; there being—ayes 106, noes 76.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. MORRISON. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Monday, December 24, 1883, they stand adjourned until Thursday, the 3d day of January, 1884.

Mr. MORRISON. In connection with this resolution I desire to say that if it be adopted unanimous consent will be asked that on Monday next no other business be transacted than the announcement of committees, so that the recess will practically begin to-morrow.

The resolution was adopted; there being ayes 143, noes 21.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 616) to establish a standard of time in the District of Columbia.

SELECT COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to ask the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following-named select committees, consisting of the same number of members, with like powers and duties, as in the Forty-seventh Congress, be appointed for the Forty-eighth Congress, namely:

Committee on Reform in the Civil Service; Committee on Law respecting Election of President and Vice-President; Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay; Committee on the Public Health; and Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics of the Hall of the House of Representatives.

Also, a committee, to be composed of seven members, on American ship-building and ship-owning interests, which shall investigate the causes of the decline of the American foreign carrying trade; and said committee shall have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. REED. I desire to offer an amendment and to make a statement in regard to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, "Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic."

Mr. REED. In the Committee on Rules by some mistake this matter was omitted. It was understood that all the committees that were not to be included in the original resolution would be read over; and this committee, by some accident, was not read over. My colleague on the committee [Mr. BLACKBURN] gives me permission to offer the amendment, with this statement: that a majority of the Committee on Rules would have favored the amendment had it not been thus accidentally omitted. I will state to the House that I was intending to insist upon the retention of this committee and supposed until this morning that it had been retained.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In justice to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], my colleague on the committee, I desire to say that his statement accords exactly with my recollection. The continuation of this select committee was not, as I remember, discussed in the Committee on Rules at all. I have reason to believe, and doubtless he believes, there would have been some division of opinion in the committee in reference to the select committee that he now proposes to insert by way of amendment.

I am frank to say that I am opposed to the amendment; but I think it fair that the gentleman should have the right, which he now claims, to offer the amendment, leaving it to the House to determine whether this shall be inserted among the select committees to be continued in this Congress.

Mr. REED. With the understanding of a majority of the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I believe a majority of the committee would favor it.

Mr. WILLIS. I have an amendment to offer in the nature of a substitute. In one word I can explain it. It leaves the committees identical with the report of the Committee on Rules, except that it increases the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service from eleven to thirteen. It increases the Committee on the Law respecting the Election of the President and Vice-President from eleven to thirteen. It increases the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay from seven to nine. It leaves the Committee on Public Health at nine. It leaves the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics at seven. It increases the committee on American shipping, the last one mentioned, from seven to nine. It does not enumerate the Committee on the Alcoholic Traffic as one of the committees.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. YOUNG. Let it be read.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will call for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, that we may see who it is that favors sumptuary legislation and who it is in the party to which he and I belong that wishes to regulate by Congress the domestic habits, customs, and appetites of the people.

The amendment was reported at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. VANCE. The gentleman from Texas talks about legislating in favor of sumptuary laws and saying what a man shall eat and drink. In my judgment, sir, the object is to get information on a subject that reaches and touches every human being on this continent. It affects every man, woman, and child, and every interest in this great country. [Applause on the Republican side.] I think that the sentiment of the temperance people of the United States of America ought to be respected in this House, which creates committees on almost every other subject. We have committees on legislation in regard to the yellow fever and we have committees in regard to the cotton worm. [Laughter.] We have committees on sending expeditions to the North Pole in search of vessels that have been lost, and then why, sir, should not the representatives of the American people inquire in reference to that vessel of intemperance which has wrecked so many households in this land of ours. [Applause.] I hope, sir, the Representatives of the American people will allow the friends of humanity, the friends of truth, justice, and mercy to be heard; that they will extend to the people the opportunity to gather every information on a subject of such tremendous importance as the one now before the House. Will the American Representatives here, sir, deny to millions of people the right to be heard on this important question? [Cries of "No!"] I hope not.

I hope we will not be denied the simple right of having a committee on the subject. It does not necessarily follow we are to have a prohibitory law because of the raising of such a committee. Not at all, sir. We want information. We want to know what it costs this Government because of this evil of intemperance. We state that it costs more than the taxes which would be required to educate every man, woman, and child, white and black, in this broad land. I believe it will be better for us to stand up in the interest of humanity, in the interest of schools, in the interest of peace and of right, as well as in the interest of mercy. It is better for us to do so than to stand up here in the interest of the liquor traffic which is carried on at the price of the blood of our people. [Applause.] I hope we shall have this committee, and I do so with all due deference to my friend on my left from Texas.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I never like to be misunderstood. I have no hesitation in saying that I voted that this resolution might be reported to the House for its action. I never have favored sumptuary legislation of any sort, and I do not know that I ever shall. But I do know that there ought to be the widest latitude in behalf of the right of petition; that these people who are interested and agitated on the subject that would naturally go to this select committee, if the House shall appoint it, have a right to be heard; and to that extent I am willing to take the consequences and vote in the affirmative, that they may be heard.

Mr. BLACKBURN. As it is evident that the resolution reported by order of the Committee on Rules will consume the rest of this day or this week or this year if allowed to go on in this fashion, unless the gentleman from Maine desires to be heard upon the amendment which he has submitted, I am going to ask the previous question.

Mr. REED. Just a word.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But I want to say a word myself. [Laughter.] I will divide the time with him if he desires to be heard.

There has been nothing said against his amendment. The gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Pennsylvania have both debated it in the affirmative. I am as much in favor of the widest range of petition as the gentleman from Pennsylvania or any other gentleman on this floor. But that is not the question presented here. There is not a citizen upon the American continent who is not entitled to and does not hold that right, the dearest of all possessions of the American people—the right of petition. That is not the question presented here at all. The question is whether there shall be a special committee raised by this House for this purpose and for none other. That is the only question. It does not involve the right of petition. I was perfectly willing for this House to vote upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine without debate. I am willing that the House shall take a vote upon it now, after being debated, and all on one side.

If the gentleman from Maine desires to be heard in support of his amendment I shall not ask the previous question. If he does not feel that his side of the question has been sufficiently debated I am willing that he may be heard. If he is satisfied with the discussion upon his side, I shall demand it.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will allow this debate to run for a short time. I would like to have five minutes myself.

Mr. REED. I want to say but a single word to close the debate that has already taken place.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I shall ask the right of the House to call the previous question in ten minutes.

Mr. REED. That will be satisfactory to me, and I will yield five minutes of it to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLACKBURN. After that I shall call the previous question.

Mr. YOUNG. I would like to ask a question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have yielded the time allowed for debate to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. YOUNG. I do not wish to make a speech, but I should like to ask a single question in this connection.

Mr. REED. I will yield five minutes of the time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I am as much in favor of temperance as the gentleman from North Carolina or the gentleman from Pennsylvania, or anybody else. I am as much in favor of all of the good things that the people of these United States enjoy as either one of these gentlemen or any other of my peers upon this floor. But, Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who believe that great truths can never be propagated by legislative decrees. I am one of those who walk in the foot-paths of our old fathers of the Constitution, who held to the doctrine that all great improvements in morals, in science, in religion, in everything, must come through the brain and the conscience of the people, and not over the back with the whip. I hold that the powers of government must be strictly confined to the preservation of life, liberty, property, and the growth and enjoyment of happiness among its citizens in this life. I hold that all these great questions must come alone through the conscience and the judgment and enlightened understanding of the people themselves. That is the very foundation-stone upon which our Government is based; and the gentleman from North Carolina who drew such a strong picture in favor of temperance could have drawn a much more powerful parallel in favor of his position if he had pictured the beneficial influences upon mankind of the Christian religion. What has it done for mankind? It has laid the very track for the advance of our civilization. No country has ever been civilized, or great, or powful except through the doctrines that were taught by Jesus of Nazareth. But what member on this floor would dare to ask the Congress of the United States to define orthodoxy? What standard would you set up? What member here would ask for the appointment of a committee of Congress to declare whether the Methodist, or the Presbyterian, or the Baptist religion was the orthodox faith of Christianity? Sir, that is something that lies beyond the pale of government. It is something that lies in the heart of man, without an appeal to government. It is something which the jealous fathers of their country, they who loved liberty better than life, have written down in the Constitution of the United States that the impure hand of government should never touch. Christianity can live without the support of government, and so can temperance.

Temperance has never been advanced by any legal enactment either in a State Legislature or in the National Council. It never can be. It is one of the impossible things to drive men forward in civilization by legislative decrees.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. I try to have but one object in addressing the House, and that is to further the proposition I am maintaining. I do not feel under the present circumstances that it is necessary for me to argue this point. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has succinctly and correctly stated what is our duty in the premises and the foundation for it, and if on the Democratic side and on the Republican there is that feeling, I am very confident that the shadow of the great rock of temperance has extended all over this land without respect to party.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky calls for the previous question.

Mr. YOUNG. I protest against this summary and inconsiderate method of legislation, forcing upon the House the consideration of this resolution without discussion, and without being informed even of the powers and functions with which it is proposed to invest this new committee. I do not want to be called upon to vote for any measure without knowing something of its purpose and probable effect. What is to be the scope of this committee? What are to be its limitations? I have no information on the subject further than is conveyed in its title, which indeed seems to be all there is of it. "A committee on alcoholic liquor traffic!" What kind of traffic is meant? Traffic between the States or with foreign governments?

I take it that Congress has no constitutional power to interfere with any other character of traffic in alcoholic liquor or any other commodity. If it is proposed to regulate its manufacture, sale, or use in the States, then it is the purpose of the resolution, and will be the work of the committee, to override constitutional restraints and assume control of a matter exclusively under State and municipal jurisdiction.

I am quite willing to assist in any legitimate and proper temperance movement, any moral reform, so far as I can as a private citizen; but I do not consider that this House has constitutional authority to undertake specifically that character of legislation, though my friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] seems to think differently. But I do not know that the committee is asked for in the interest even of temperance or morality. We are left wholly to conjecture as to what its real purpose is.

Mr. RANDALL. It is exactly like the one we had in last Congress.

Mr. YOUNG. Well, then, let the resolution so state it.

Mr. REED. It is what we have had for the past two years.

Mr. YOUNG. That is no answer to either my objection or my inquiry. I am not so much concerned about what was done in the last Congress as in what is to be done in this one. If the resolution were written out and the object of the committee fully disclosed I might possibly vote for it, but I will not vote for any measure no more definitely stated than this one is.

Mr. WILLIS. The proposition I sent to the desk I withdraw as a substitute and offer as an amendment; and I make the Committee on American Shipping to consist of eleven members.

The SPEAKER. That is not now before the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call the previous question.

Several members called for the reading of the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following:

"Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine that he may indicate the number.

The SPEAKER. The first part of the resolution provides that the committee shall consist of the same number as in the last House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I will say that in the last House the committee consisted of nine members.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 142, nays 86, not voting 93; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the reading of the names of the members voting be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. COVINGTON, is confined to his room by sickness.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. DUNN with Mr. WADSWORTH on this vote.

Mr. MULDROW with Mr. FINERTY on this question.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. REED. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also move to lay the motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out so much of the report of the committee as provides for the creation of a committee on ship-building and ship-owning.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not understand it as having been ordered on the whole resolution.

The SPEAKER. The minutes will show.

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly no one around me understood the previous question as being ordered on the whole matter, and I was listening attentively.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair misunderstood the scope of the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] the amendment indicated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] will be in order after the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] is disposed of.

The amendment offered by Mr. WILLIS was read, as follows:

Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, thirteen members.
Committee on Law respecting the Election of President and Vice-President, thirteen members.
Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, nine members.
Committee on Public Health, nine members.
Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, seven members.
Committee on American Shipping, eleven members.

Mr. REED. I do not think this amendment is understood. If it is a substitute, it will directly kill the last vote of the House by dropping out the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

The SPEAKER. It is not a substitute, as now offered, but an addition to the report of the Committee on Rules. It does not affect in any manner whatever the action of the House just taken.

The amendment of Mr. WILLIS was then agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I now move to amend by striking out so much as provides for the creation of a Select Committee on American Shipping, as I believe it is called.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to say—

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish to be interrupted now.

Mr. KEIFER. I rise to a point of order, and that is that the previous question is now operating.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] simply moved the previous question on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. KEIFER. I did not so understand it; I understood the Speaker to say that the first question would be on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REAGAN. The Committee on Rules will report to the House during the day, and the House will undoubtedly adopt a proposition to take from the Committee on Commerce all that part of its labors which relates to the improvements of rivers and harbors—to the water ways of the country. The object of that will be to enable the Committee on Commerce to discharge the duties which rightfully pertain to it independently of that portion of their present duties.

The select committee for the purpose here indicated was created at the last session of Congress because neither the House Committee on Commerce nor the Senate Committee on Commerce, having the river and harbor bill before them, had time to give the necessary and proper consideration to the other important subjects connected with the commerce of the country.

The Senate has already provided for taking the river and harbor bill from the Committee on Commerce, so that that committee can perform the duties ordinarily assigned to it. The House will without doubt do the same thing, and then the Committee on Commerce can well discharge the remainder of the duties assigned to it.

I trust, whoever may be on the Committee on Commerce, that that committee will not be further emasculated in its duties by taking away a large part of the remainder of its duties, and by creating a new committee with a jurisdiction conflicting with that of the Committee on Commerce. You can not have two committees in existence under the terms creating these committees without a conflict of jurisdiction.

Now, I take it that it is not the purpose of the House to multiply committees for the mere sake of multiplying them, and thereby producing confusion and inconvenience. For instance, there will be bills before the committee which relate to the subject of what is called free shipping, to ship-owning and ship-building. Which of these two committees would have jurisdiction of that subject? And who could say that under the rules the jurisdiction of that subject could rightfully be taken from either of these committees? Certainly they both would have jurisdiction.

I simply desire to have the House understand that there is no necessity for this new committee; that it produces confusion and should not be authorized.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire simply to say that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is assuming as a fact what has not yet been acted upon by the House. I have no authority to speak for this House nor has any other gentleman on this floor.

Further, I simply desire to say that the Committee on Commerce has shown conclusively that it has more work than it can do; for however well it may have done its work under the able guidance of the gentleman from Texas for many years, it has never finished it and never completed it.

This question proposed to be submitted to a select committee does not trench at all upon the powers of the Committee on Commerce, for it is impossible that the Committee on Commerce should ever reach the realm which the proposed select committee is intended to cover.

Now, if the Committee on Commerce should be broken into two committees, as the gentleman from Texas says very correctly that it is proposed to do, then we will send to the committee on river and harbor improvements that feature of the former work of the Committee on Commerce, and still leave the old committee with its hands full to consider and determine questions relating to American commerce and to the interstate commerce of the country.

The select committee proposed is one to consider such legislation as relates to the decadence of American shipping, ship-building, and ship-owning. Even though the Committee on Commerce should be broken into two committees, this select committee, in my judgment, would not infringe upon or change the domain of either of them.

Believing that the House knows now, from the statements of the gentleman from Texas, as well as it will hereafter be able to inform itself, I must ask the previous question, or otherwise we will never be able properly to dispose of our reports.

Mr. REAGAN. One sentence, that the House may not be misled by the statements of the gentleman.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The House knows that I am not trying to mislead it.

Mr. REAGAN. But the gentleman has misled the House by the statement which he has made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman can make his statement in a minute or two, and when he has done will renew the motion for the previous question, I will yield to him.

Mr. REAGAN. I will do so. The gentleman assumes as a basis of his argument that the Committee on Commerce can not attend to this matter because of the duties it already has in connection with the river and harbor bill, when he knows that he holds in his hand a report to be submitted at this time for the purpose of creating a river and harbor committee, relieving the Committee on Commerce from this branch of its duties.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman does not want to misrepresent me, I am sure. I made no such claim, and I do not intend to rest my protest against that amendment upon any such claim.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Committee on Commerce is stripped of the duty of reporting the river and harbor bill, which is enough to well occupy the time of one committee, it will leave ample time to perform all the other duties which have heretofore been intrusted to this committee. It will be wrong in practice, it will produce inconvenience and trouble, to make another committee to attend to what has been the business of the Committee on Commerce; and there is no necessity for it. According to the gentleman's request, I renew the motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand the previous question on the amendment only?

Mr. REAGAN. That is as far as I can go.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call for the previous question upon the whole report.

Mr. HORR. The gentleman does not propose to adopt this whole thing without any debate?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not understand what the gentleman from Michigan means by "this whole thing."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] demands the previous question upon the whole report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no information of any intention on the part of any gentleman to make any amendment beyond what is pending here. The proposition includes nothing but select committees.

Mr. HORR. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thought not.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken upon agreeing to the amendment of Mr. REAGAN to strike from the report so much as proposes to continue the Select Committee on Shipping Interests, it was not agreed to; there being ayes 51, noes 134.

The question being then taken on agreeing to the report, it was adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to ask the adoption of the report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom were referred the following propositions, viz:

Amend Rule X "Of Committees;" change Committee on Education and Labor by striking out the words "and Labor;" and to add to section 1 of said rule the following: "A Committee on Labor, to consist of seven members, to which shall be referred all proposed legislation and matters affecting the working classes," having had the same under consideration, report the following substitute therefor, viz:

Amend paragraph 22 of Rule X by striking out the words "and Labor" and inserting next thereafter as a new paragraph the following, viz:

"On Labor, to consist of seven members."

Amend paragraph 22 of Rule XI by striking out the words "and Labor" where they occur in said paragraph, and insert next thereafter, as a new paragraph, the following, viz:

"To and affecting labor, to the Committee on Labor."

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman offer this as an amendment to the substitute offered by the committee?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Unless otherwise specially ordered by the House, the Speaker shall appoint, at the commencent of each Congress, the following standing committees, viz:

On Elections, to consist of fifteen members.
On Ways and Means, to consist of thirteen members.
On Appropriations, to consist of fifteen members.
On the Judiciary, to consist of fifteen members.
On Banking and Currency, to consist of thirteen members.
On Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to consist of thirteen members.
On Commerce, to consist of fifteen members.
On Rivers and Harbors, to consist of fifteen members.
On Agriculture, to consist of fifteen members.
On Foreign Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
On Military Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
On Naval Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
On the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to consist of thirteen members.
On the Public Lands, to consist of thirteen members.
On Indian Affairs, to consist of thirteen members.
On the Territories, to consist of thirteen members.
On Railways and Canals, to consist of thirteen members.
On Manufactures, to consist of thirteen members.
On Mines and Mining, to consist of thirteen members.
On Public Buildings and Grounds, to consist of thirteen members.
On Pacific Railroads, to consist of thirteen members.
On Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, to consist of thirteen members.
On Education and Labor, to consist of thirteen members.
On the Militia, to consist of thirteen members.
On Patents, to consist of thirteen members.
On Invalid Pensions, to consist of fifteen members.
On Pensions, to consist of thirteen members.
On Claims, to consist of fifteen members.
On War Claims, to consist of thirteen members.
On Private Land Claims, to consist of thirteen members.
On the District of Columbia, to consist of thirteen members.
On Revision of the Laws, to consist of thirteen members.

Mr. WILLIS. As the hour is growing late I shall, in explaining the nature and intent of this amendment, be as brief as possible. The proposition I submit is precisely the same as the report made by the Committee on Rules, with two exceptions. In the first place, it restores the Committee on Education and Labor, but increases its membership from eleven to thirteen. In the second place, it increases twenty-two other committees that now consist of eleven members to thirteen members each. If the Committee on Rules had had more time to consider these questions, if any gentleman acquainted with the business heretofore referred to the committee which it is now proposed to divide had been heard upon the subject, I should with great hesitancy have intervened upon my own responsibility with any amendment touching either of these two points. It did not, however, occur to me until last evening, which was after the committee had taken final action, to offer this amendment. It should have been formally presented in the House, so that the committee could have had the benefit of a general expression of opinion. If the House had generally approved, as I believe would have been the case, the Committee on Rules, I doubt not, would have made no serious objection. Even as it is I hope there will be no difficulty.

The report of the Committee on Rules creates a committee on rivers and harbors of fifteen members. The amendment I have offered agrees in that particular with the report. It seems generally conceded that the Committee on Commerce should have more time to consider the important questions coming under its jurisdiction, and with this view the creation of a new committee on rivers and harbors seems to meet with favor on all sides.

The committee, however, in its necessarily hurried consideration of the subject, has failed to act upon what seems to be the most important question in this connection, and that is the propriety and necessity of an increase of the committee membership corresponding with the increase of members of the House.

There were in the Forty-seventh Congress forty-three standing committees, five joint, and nine select committees of the House. The majority representation on those committees in the last Congress comprised three hundred and forty-six, the minority two hundred and twenty-one; total, five hundred and sixty-seven, or lacking only nineteen of being double the number of members. Nearly every member was t'ns assigned to at least two, and quite a number were upon three or four, committees.

This report of the Committee on Rules abolishes one standing committee, that on "Public Expenditures," of eleven members, the Joint Select Committee on the Census, of eleven members, and three select committees, to wit: on "Additional Accommodation for Congressional Library," on "Woman Suffrage," and on the "Improvement of the Mississippi River," comprising a total of twenty-three members; making a grand total of forty-five. In other words, there are in this Congress forty-five less committee positions than in the last. Against this loss of forty-five we must deduct fifteen for the proposed new committee on rivers and harbors and seven for the proposed committee on labor, which will reduce the loss to twenty-three.

Here, then, we have the figures. In the Forty-seventh Congress there were five hundred and sixty-seven committee positions; in the Forty-eighth Congress there are only five hundred and forty-four.

But what further important fact presents itself? This is the first Congress which has convened since the apportionment under the last census. As the result of that apportionment we have here an increased membership of thirty-two. While the number of committee places, including the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, is twenty-three less, the number of members is thirty-two more, than in the last Congress. In order to be on the same footing as we were in the Forty-seventh Congress these thirty-two new members must be provided with an average of two places to each one, and the twenty-three places abolished must be supplied, making a total of eighty-seven new committee positions. As four of the five members of the present Committee on Rules were members of the same committee in the last Congress, and as the basis of committee representation upon which this proposed increase is asked met with their unanimous approbation, as shown by their report, then may we not reasonably hope for equal unanimity in the same direction in this Congress? And especially may we not expect it in view of the judgment of the House, which has just been expressed with practical unanimity as to the propriety of increasing the Select Committee on American Ship-building from seven, as reported by the committee, to eleven, the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service from eleven to thirteen, the Committee on Law respecting Election of President and Vice-President from eleven to thirteen, and the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay from seven to nine members?

Following in the path already designated by the almost united voice of this House to-day, this amendment proposes to increase twenty-three standing committees from eleven, their present number, to thirteen, making an increase of forty-six new committee positions upon these standing committees, or adding to those already created, we will have a total increase of fifty-six. Such an increase hardly demands a suggestion. It is the proper time for such an increase, it is in the direction of a more democratic and more republican form of legislation, it is demanded by the logic of the situation. Why should it not be done? What sound reason can be given against it? Are we not yearly increasing in numerical strength, in wealth, and in power? Are not the subjects coming before Congress growing every day in importance and in intricacy, and do they not demand more and more every day the close scrutiny and consideration of Congress?

How is that investigation had? What are our modes of legislation? What is the character of the rules which we have bound and fettered ourselves with? Do we not all know that the work in this House is done in the committees? Do we not see that no proposition, no measure—I care not how meritorious, I care not how fully it may receive the approbation of the American people—can be voted on by this American Congress unless some committee, consisting it may be of five or ten or a baker's dozen, shall first grant its gracious permission? Do we not know that there are to-day in the archives of these committees bills for the relief of the people which will never be reported, which we will never have the opportunity to express even our judgment upon? Do we not know that upon the floor of this House, through these absurd, illogical, arbitrary rules, a tyranny frequently prevails which would put an Eastern despot to the blush. Do we not know that there is more liberty of debate, more courageous consideration of public questions, in the French Assembly—ay, even in the British Parliament—than here upon the floor of the American Congress in this boasted era of civil and political freedom?

How are we to meet and overthrow this undemocratic and unrepublican system? One remedy is now before us. Increase the membership on these committees and thus increase their representative character. You lessen the possibility of smothering in the committee the great questions which are intrusted to your keeping. You destroy the power of oligarchy and build up the rights and privileges of the people. Let every member, whether new or old, have his post of duty upon one or two committees, and let us have a return to the rule of the many as against the arbitrary control of the few. I feel assured that if the Committee on Rules had fully considered these facts we would have their hearty co-operation.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has stated that the Committee on Rules did not have time to consider this amendment. He is mistaken in that particular, as we had full time. But I am free to say that if the Speaker of this House desires this increase I have not only no disposition to interfere with it, but will accelerate its adoption.

Mr. WILLIS. It is proper, it is right, that I should say that the Speaker of this House has not been consulted as to this increased representation. The amendment I offer is in view of the facts I have stated and of the increased membership of this House. If it does not commend itself to the judgment of the House on those facts and considerations there is no other reason that can be given why it should be accepted.

I was about to refer to the other point in which this amendment differs from the report of the Committee on Rules, and that is as to the Committee on Education and Labor. While I consider this a minor objection, I have yet thought proper to present it to the House.

The proposition is to divide the Committee on Education and Labor and to make two committees, consisting of eleven and seven, respectively, members in lieu of the present one. For six years I have been a member of that committee. I am the oldest member in service upon it now here. I may be pardoned, therefore, for a suggestion in regard to this proposition. Four-fifths of the subjects over which it has exercised jurisdiction during the last three Congresses related to questions affecting labor. Its principal work was upon such subjects. The report on and passage of the Chinese bill, the eight-hour resolution, the establishment of a bureau of labor statistics will be recalled by old members as a part, and but a small part, of its work in this direction. What was true in preceding Congresses will even more fully be the case in the present Congress. Indeed there is only one live, important, substantial proposition touching education which will be before the committee, and that is the question of extending Federal aid temporarily to the States.

There are several other bills upon educational subjects, but they are crude, visionary, and impracticable, and will never, I predict, get out of the committee-room. In other words, Mr. Speaker, if you appoint a separate committee on education its whole occupation during the present Congress will be the consideration of a single bill; and I submit it to the judgment of this House whether it comports with its dignity, whether it will tend to illustrate the practical business principles which should control our action as Representatives, to organize a committee whose sole duty shall be confined to one single bill. So much for one branch of that proposition.

Now as to the questions affecting labor interests. I take it that it was the object of the gentleman introducing this resolution and of the committee who reported it to secure a fuller consideration of the problems involving the welfare and prosperity of the laboring classes of our country. If that was their object, as I doubt not it was, it has my most hearty sympathy. I will co-operate with them to the fullest extent in the accomplishment of so desirable a result. But I submit it to them as their friend, as the Representative of a district vitally interested in these questions. As a member of that committee heretofore, familiar with its duties, I submit it to them that the very object which they and all the friends of the laboring classes have in view will be hindered and not helped, will be retarded and not advanced, by the division of this committee. And why do I say this? Because you propose here that the Committee on Labor shall consist only of seven members, while practically now you have a committee of eleven members. If you want to change the name of the committee, do so; call it the committee on labor and education if you like; dignify labor to any extent and in any way you please. I care nothing as to the sentimental aspect of the case, but I do insist that the substantial, practical possibilities of discussion and legislation shall not be lessened by degrading the character of the committee, by reducing its working membership, and destroying in part its weight and influence in the councils of the nations.

There is, moreover, an intimate connection between educational questions and the condition of our laboring classes. To education more than to any other force or influence must our industrial classes look for the improvement of their social, personal, and political condition. And there is to-day no bill before the American Congress so intimately interwoven with the future welfare and prosperity of our workingmen, both white and colored, as that which is now before this Committee on Education and Labor, which proposes to place within their reach a good common-school education "without money and without price." Instead, therefore, of there being an incongruity, there is, to my mind, the closest and most logical connection between the two subjects over which this committee now has jurisdiction.

I would recognize that interdependence, I would dignify labor by associating it with education, by retaining the name of the committee as it now stands, or, if changed at all, I would make it the Committee on Labor and Education. Not only that, but instead of reducing I would increase its membership from its present number, eleven, to thirteen.

That is my first objection to this report.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced concurrence in the resolution for adjournment over the Christmas holidays, with amendments, in which concurrence was requested.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I was about through when interrupted by the message from the Senate, and, with this brief expression of my views in reference to these questions, I shall not detain the House any longer but ask the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the amendment also continue the Committee on the Improvements of the Mississippi River?

Mr. WILLIS. It is identical with the report of the Committee on Rules, except as to these twenty-three committees composed of eleven members. It increases them to thirteen——

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the report of the Committee on Rules propose to drop that committee?

Mr. WILLIS. That is not my understanding.

Mr. DUNN. It does not; that committee is continued.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no change except the increase from eleven to thirteen of twenty-three committees, and putting the Committee on Education and Labor back to its old status, leaving it unchanged except as to number of members, which is increased from eleven to thirteen.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does it preserve the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir; just as it is in the committee's report. I will repeat, as I said before, that there is no change except the increase of these committees from eleven to thirteen, twenty-three committees being so changed, and that change is made in response to the increased representation on this floor by the new apportionment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky before he gets through to give me a portion of his time, having offered an amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I will do that with pleasure, promising that neither I nor any member of the Committee on Rules nor all of them combined will occupy one tithe of the time in this discussion that will be occupied upon the other side.

I desire now to call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman from Kentucky, my colleague, has stated to the House that he has brought before it, and for its consideration, without consultation with the Speaker or anybody else, this radical proposition for a change in our rules, and offered it here as an amendment to the report of the committee. It is radical in its very nature. It proposes to increase twenty-three of the committees of this House. That is, in my judgment, a very dangerous innovation. He says the Committee on Rules had no time to consider the proposition. They never had an opportunity to consider it, for it never was offered in this House and sent to the Committee on Rules for its consideration. It is offered here to be voted upon on the instant. I will say to my colleague that the Committee on Rules have considered the subject of increasing these committees, and concluded that it is a dangerous path to pursue. They do not believe it wise to extend their membership any further. There is such a thing as reaching a point where you destroy the power of a committee for good results by making it bulky and unwieldy. More than that, it adds two members, as I have said, to twenty-three of the standing committees of this House. It is a question that should be considered carefully, whether you had not better make more committees than to make the unwieldy ones still more so by additional membership.

But that is not the only point raised by this amendment nor the only objection to it. It proposes to undo the very thing the report of the Committee on Rules recommends. It proposes to thwart the report of that committee by combining the two subjects of education and labor together in an unnatural alliance where they have been before. I protest against bringing the two committees together. I would be obliged to my colleague, or to any other gentleman, to tell me what possible natural connection there is between the subject of education and the subject of labor. Why had not you as well put commerce and the judiciary into one committee? But my colleague says the Committee on Education had no work to do, and yet he tells you of the great work which has been accomplished and the great educational and labor problems pending before the committee. I am perfectly willing to submit to the gentleman that it is but common fairness to this House before it shall be called upon to act upon an amendment like the one he offers, so radical in its character and results, that it should have the scrutiny that ought to be given to it; and if he will withhold or withdraw it altogether now and send it to the Committee on Rules, which for that purpose will meet to-morrow morning two hours before this House shall convene, and let them have an opportunity of examining and correcting the imperfections, if indeed they appear, as I think they do, they will report the matter back for the consideration of the House without delay.

Let it be recommitted to the Committee on Rules and let the committee meet to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, and at 12 bring it to you with the result of its judgment.

Mr. WILLIS. I have not the slightest objection to that.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair will state the amendment itself can not be recommitted. If sent to the committee it would carry with it the whole proceeding.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] can withdraw the proposition and introduce it as a new matter and have it go to the committee; and I agree with my colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], it will have full consideration.

Mr. WILLIS. As I understand the proposition is to pass the matter over and let it go before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has yielded to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] who has offered the amendment make his statement in reference to it.

Mr. WILLIS. My understanding is that the whole matter is to come before the Committee on Rules to-morrow.

Mr. BLACKBURN. You mean this report?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no; I mean the amendment you have offered.

Mr. WILLIS. I did not apprehend that was the proposition; and I do not see what advantage we will get by merely sending the amendment. There is no difficulty in understanding the proposition. I am perfectly willing, however, if the committee approves of that course, that they shall take the matter and report upon it to-morrow. It seems to me there is no need of any such haste. The only difference between the propositions is an increase of twenty-three committees from eleven to thirteen members; and I think any gentleman on this floor is able to pass on that question of his own accord in his representative capacity now. But I am willing, out of courtesy to the committee, to let it stand over until to-morrow and let the committee pass upon it before it comes before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to request that the entire subject may go over.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The report the committee has made?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no authority from the committee to withdraw the report. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I do not know whether to admire most the ingenuity or the disinterestedness of the gentleman who proposes in this adroit manner to destroy or prevent the creation in this House of a committee to consider matters affecting the interests of the working classes. I know the gentleman has been a member of the Committee on Education and Labor for years, and I know also the public prints state he is probably about to be appointed as chairman of the next committee.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman has no authority for that statement nor is there any authority for it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have seen such statements in the press.

Mr. WILLIS. And I beg to tell the gentleman that he may consider that the only thing he has ever seen in the press that is not founded on fact.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The ingenuousness of the gentleman is no doubt founded on fact, for I do not believe he is disinterested enough to have his committee divided for the public good.

Mr. WILLIS. When you know me better you will think differently.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The proposition is to divide this committee so that there shall be a committee on labor, which will consider all proposed legislation for the working classes. And I wish to say that long-winded recapitulation of committees is the most extraordinary amendment I ever saw offered in any legislative body in my life. I ask the Clerk to read the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. If the report is read it will come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. My amendment, which is the portion I desire to have read, is very short.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the following proposition, to wit:

Amend Rule X "of Committees:" Change Committee on Education and Labor by striking out the words "and Labor," and add after section 1 of said rule the following:

"The Committee on Labor, to consist of seven members, to which shall be referred all proposed legislation and matters affecting the working classes."

Having had the same under consideration——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is all I desire to have read. What has that got to do with the special bid that has been offered to the members of this House of twenty-three or forty-six places on committees of various kinds and characters? Is it pertinent to the amendment? Is it not clearly out of order, for the reason that it proposes to destroy everything intended to be created by the amendment itself?

Mr. Speaker, I stand here as a Democrat, but I stand here as a representative of the laboring element in my district. I sprang from that element, and it is not with the words of a demagogue I stand here to argue that you shall dignify the calling of labor by creating a committee in this House to which the representatives of the laboring element can submit their claims. You had better do it now, for you must realize as well as I do that there must be a vent through which the feelings of that element can reach the law-making power. You do not want this terrible rumbling and uneasiness to culminate as it did formerly in the celebrated railroad strike. You desire to find what they want. Give them, then, the right to be heard.

The gentleman has talked against dividing the committee. Who ever heard of a committee on education getting down and exhibiting common sympathy with the working classes? These upper-air and solar-walk gentlemen [laughter] do not comprehend what the workingmen want. This matter is offered in earnest, and I do not believe when it has been fairly presented this House will dare to vote it down.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now demand the previous question on the report and the pending amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I will withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment having been withdrawn, the question is upon ordering the previous question on the adoption of the report as amended.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the Committee on Rules was adopted as amended.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to submit the report which I send to the Clerk's desk and to ask for its adoption by the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the following resolution, viz—

"Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives be amended as follows, namely:

"In Rule X, after the words 'on commerce, to consist of fifteen members,' add 'on rivers and harbors, to consist of fifteen members.'

"Amend paragraph 7 of Rule XI so as to read as follows:

"'To commerce, life-saving service, and light-houses, other than appropriations for life-saving service and light-houses, to the Committee on Commerce.'

"And insert next thereafter the following paragraph:

"'To the improvement of rivers and harbors, to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have the same privilege in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills'"—

Having had the same under consideration, report it without amendment and recommend its adoption.

Mr. HORR. I make a point of order on that report, because there is not time to discuss it to-night, that it must lie over.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no; it has laid over once.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I recognize the point of order without calling upon the Chair to decide it.

Mr. HORR. I make it simply because I do not think we have time to-day to consider it.

Mr. SPRINGER. It has already gone over one day from the time it was introduced.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not material whether the point of order is good or not; it should lie over.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no inclination to press it now; let it go over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The report just read will lie over one day under the rules of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KEIFER. Is the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] through with his reports?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have an adverse report to make, with instructions to move that it lie upon the table, which will of course cut off all debate. It will take but a moment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us adjourn now.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, no. Let the report be made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I submit an adverse report from the Committee on Rules, and move that it do lie upon the table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I apprehend that I understand the nature of the report, and think that it had better lie over until to-morrow.

SEATS AND DESKS IN THE HALL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the following resolution, having had the same under consideration, report the same adversely and recommend that it do lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol be directed during the adjournment of Congress for the Christmas and New Year holidays to remove the desks now in the Hall of the House, and to make such rearrangement of the seats of members as will bring them together in the smallest convenient space without affecting the rights of members to occupy the seats already selected by them under the rules of the House; and that he be also directed to provide suitable writing tables for the use of members, to be placed in the space in the rear and at the sides of the Hall, and also in the lobby at the rear of the Speaker's chair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have a substitute to offer for that resolution, and if the gentleman will allow it to go over until to-morrow I will not present the substitute until then.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will not insist upon that motion if the gentleman will allow this report to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am of course always ready to accommodate the gentleman from Illinois in any way that I can. But I am acting now under the instructions of the Committee on Rules to make this adverse report and move that it do lie upon the table so as to cut off debate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman withdraw that motion for a moment so that I may submit a resolution?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois insists upon his motion to adjourn, the Chair of course must submit it to the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In order to allow the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] to submit his resolution I will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I insist upon the floor, and move that the report I have made from the Committee on Rules lie upon the table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I then move a substitute.

The SPEAKER. A substitute can not be offered pending a motion to lie on the table.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not in order to move a substitute.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My point is that this is a question of privilege, relating to the comfort and convenience of members of this House, and it is in order at any time, as I understand, to present a proposition of this kind.

The SPEAKER. The very report now under consideration is a question of privilege.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to permit this question to have some consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the proposition lie upon the table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope that will be voted down.

The motion of Mr. BLACKBURN was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion to lay on the table was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON WOMEN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. KEIFER. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to report the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk; but it is my duty to state that while this resolution was ordered to be reported, it was simply for the purpose of getting the opinion of the House upon the question of the establishment of the committee named. The report does not express the judgment of the committee as to the merits of the proposition; but the Committee on Rules instructed me to submit the resolution for consideration.

Mr. MILLS. I hope that this motion will be withheld until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] can call up and have concurred in the amendments of the Senate to our resolution for a holiday recess.

Mr. KEIFER. The motion which I submit can go over if necessary.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of seven members be appointed, to whom shall be referred all petitions, bills, and resolves asking for the extension of suffrage to women or the removal of their legal disabilities.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has this subject been referred to the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. It was not referred by any action of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I make the point of order that it is not properly reported from the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. This is not a proposition to amend the standing rules. I ought to state further that I am personally in favor of the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. REAGAN. I move that it be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist on my point of order. Let that be settled. If it is overruled I have another point to make, which is that it has not been reported heretofore, and therefore must lie over one day. I insist on the other point first.

Mr. KEIFER. If there is any doubt upon the question—I think there is none—I have no objection to letting the matter go over, especially in view of the lateness of the hour. I do not concede that the point of order is well taken; but, if there be no objection on the part of members of the Committee on Rules or other gentlemen I am willing that the resolution shall go over, with the understanding that it shall come up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will lie over if there be no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is pending.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. MORRISON. I call up as a question of privilege the resolution for a recess of the two Houses, which is now on the Speaker's table, with amendments of the Senate.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "Thursday" and insert "Monday;" and in line 5 strike out "3d" and insert "7th;" so that as amended the resolution will read:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Monday, December 24, 1883, they stand adjourned until Monday, January 7, 1884."

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The proposition which I offered as an amendment to the report of the Committee on Rules was withdrawn with the understanding that it should go to the committee. I do not know that it is necessary for me to represent it; but if so, I offer it now for the purpose of having it referred to the committee.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

There was no objection.

PATRICK O'DONNELL.

Mr. CALKINS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish for the information of this House without delay, if not incompatible with the public service, all communications, documents, and papers in his possession relating to the trial, conviction, and execution of the late Patrick O'Donnell by the British Government.

Mr. CALKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF DISCHARGED EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. GEDDES. I rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of offering the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read, and which relates to the compensation of discharged employés.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution giving one month's pay to certain employés of the House of Representatives.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all officers and employés of the House, including the Capitol police who were employed on the 3d day of December, 1883, and who have ceased, or who shall prior to the 1st day of February, 1884, cease, to be employed, shall be paid a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate they were severally receiving on the 3d day of December, 1883, and an amount sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the same to be immediately available.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the introduction of the joint resolution?

Mr. McMILLIN. I object to the introduction of that resolution. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] Let it go to the Committee on Accounts. I am willing to leave the question to be examined by that committee, and then we can act upon it when its report comes in.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will grant me its attention for a few moments. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, and let it be understood by the House, that there is no Committee on Accounts at this time to report on this subject. This is a resolution similar to the one which was adopted at the last Congress for the benefit of the employés who then went out of office. These men who are the beneficiaries of this proposition, and who came here for a few days, do not make enough to pay for their transportation here and back home again. It is like the resolution passed at the beginning of every Congress since I have had any knowledge of it. To a great extent the custom has been so continuous that it has become almost a law. There was no objection on this side of the House two years ago when the employés on that side of the House, of the opposite party, were to be benefited by it. It was considered then as a matter of justice. If objection be now insisted on, no provision can be made for these men who will have to go home before the holidays. I therefore appeal to the gentleman in behalf of these discharged employés not to persist in his objection. There has been no objection heretofore, and there ought not to be any now.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let it be referred to the Committee on Rules and let it go over until to-morrow, and in the mean time we can consider the question. Let the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KEIFER. It is exactly like the resolution passed two years ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution will go over until to-morrow.

SURRENDER OF WASHINGTON'S COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, announced the appointment, under joint resolution (H. Res. 65) relating to the surrender by George Washington of his commission as commander-in-chief of the patriot forces of America, of the following select committee: Mr. HOBLITZELL of Maryland, Mr. CABELL of Virginia, Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. KASSON of Iowa, and Mr. LONG of Massachusetts.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. COOK, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. DAVIDSON, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, for five days.

To Mr. WOOD, until after the holidays.

To Mr. AIKEN, until after the holidays, on account of important business.

To Mr. JOHNSON, until January 9.

To Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, indefinitely.

To Mr. DIBBLE, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MOREY, for ten days, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. MORRISON (at 5 o'clock p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELMONT: The petition of American artists, asking the removal of duties on works of art—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BLAND: The petition of B. T. Swart, of Washington, D. C., for compensation for use of farm, timber, wood, &c., by the United States Army in September, 1861—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CLAY: The petition of Mrs. Mary F. Woothon, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. W. R. COX: The petition of citizens of Bertie County, North Carolina, for extension of mail-route from post-office at Norfleet's Ferry—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DEUSTER: Three petitions, bearing the names of 7,959 citizens and soldiers of the late war, praying for a pension for all soldiers of the late war—severally to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DINGLEY: The petition of the president of the Board of Trade and ship-owners of Bath, Me., for the passage of the bills "to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine" and "to encourage American ship-building for the foreign carrying trade," and to constitute a bureau of commerce and navigation—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. I. N. Mr. FAIR presented two memorials and joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Nevada; which were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Assembly joint memorial and resolution No. 30, relative to Congress placing a protective tariff on silver bullion, passed February 27, 1883.

The people of the State of Nevada represented in senate and assembly do memorialize the Congress of the United States as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has placed a high protective tariff upon the foreign importation of iron, copper, and other valuable metals, thereby protecting home industries and home products against foreign competition; and

Whereas mining for silver is the leading industry and paramount interest in nearly all of the great States and Territories, which embrace within their boundaries all that vast region extending from the eastern spurs of the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific coast, therein affording employment to thousands of the most worthy and enterprising of our fellow-citizens: Therefore, your memorialists do most respectfully urge Congress to enact such laws as are necessary to place a tariff on all foreign importations of silver, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the tariff to exactly correspond with the discount on silver, that in the event of the free coinage of the same the prosperity of the country shall not be imperiled by the unrestricted importation of this metal; and for this they will ever pray.

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representative be requested to use all honorable means to secure the enactment of such laws as are herein indicated.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to speedily transmit a copy of the foregoing to each of our Senators and Representative in Congress, and also the governor of each State and Territory engaged in mining and producing silver bullion, with the request that the same be presented to the respective Legislatures for joint appeals to Congress for the relief herein prayed for.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of state. Done at office, in Carson City, Nev., this 16th day of March, A. D. 1883.

Senate memorial and joint resolution relative to the unlimited coinage of silver, passed February 24, 1883.

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Nevada, respectfully appeal to the Congress of the United States for relief from the unjust legislation in force against the industry and interest of the people of the State of Nevada in the regulation of the national coinage and in other ways. In the formation of the Federal Union it was decreed to be for the mutual benefit of every State and Territory under its control, and the protection of all the industries and interests of every section alike; and that there has been a wide departure from these just principles of the fathers, let certain facts be stated. By an unequal adjustment of the Federal tariff our people are made to pay on all the supplies they consume in the production and manufacture of silver an outrageous tribute to the protected industries of the Atlantic States, without any compensating benefit from Federal legislation on what they produce. On the contrary, they are wronged by the Government out of more than one-eighth part of their silver in its purchase for coinage at the mints; and coinage, being an exclusive monopoly of the Government, is managed in an unjust and arbitrary manner; coining gold bullion upon demand, and refusing the same privilege to the producers of silver bullion. London quotations are made to control and regulate the price of American-produced silver, Nevada's chief industry, while the chief industry of Pennsylvania, the production of iron and steel (as an instance of Federal partiality and favoritism), is sustained by a protective tariff: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we hereby invoke Congressional action against such unparalleled discrimination; and we instruct our Senators and request our Representatives in Congress to demand in the name of the people of this State the unlimited coinage of silver bullion produced in the United States of America upon the same terms and conditions that are accorded to the producers of gold bullion.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be, and is, requested to forward immediately a copy of this memorial to each of our Senators and Representative.

Mr. FAIR presented three memorials and joint resolutions of the Legislature of Nevada; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 18, relating to desert land entries, passed February 19, 1883.

Whereas a large number of entries were made in the United States land office in this State under the act of March 3, 1877, known as the "desert land act," covering hundreds of thousands of acres of land of which only a very small number of entries have been completed by final proof and payment, covering only a few thousand acres of said land; and

Whereas many of the entries having lapsed by limitation of law, and by present regulations of the General Land Office can not be re-entered until they have been canceled by said Department; and

Whereas at the date of the passage of said act the grants to the State had been nearly exhausted, the homestead and pre-emption acts requiring actual occupation and cultivation, and only 160 acres could be taken under said acts; and very many people of this and other States, with the idea of securing 640 acres, filed under the said act; and

Whereas the supposition that said entries were assignable was made more certain from the fact that the blank receipts sent from the Department for official use so distinctly stated; and

Whereas under this state of facts many entries were made and assigned, and the parties have left the State and the Pacific coast; and

Whereas, for these and other reasons, not more than one-fifth of the applicants can make the proof required for final entry; and

Whereas many thousand acres of said lands would be entered by homestead, pre-emption, or State selections if cleared of these lapsed entries; and

Whereas no patents have ever issued in cases of final entries, and some of them were made more than four years ago: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That our Senators are hereby instructed and our Representative in Congress is hereby requested to use all honorable means to secure—

First. The adoption of such rules and regulations by the General Land Office as will insure that all lapsed desert land entries shall be canceled after due notice to applicants.

Second. That all final entries under the act, whether made by the original applicant or by assignees, be patented at once where the proof is satisfactory and in compliance with the act.

Third. That some needed steps be taken which will insure the forwarding of patents to those who may be entitled within a reasonable time after final proof is made.

Fourth. That the governor be directed to cause to be forwarded immediately to the Senators and Representative of Nevada in Congress copies of this joint resolution.

Senate joint resolution No. 35, relative to the preservation of the National Park, passed February 28, 1883.

Whereas it is apparent from recent efforts which have been made that a number of private individuals are seeking a lease for a long term of years of the National or Yellowstone Park; and

Whereas said park is regarded as the only preserve which can ever effectually save to the nation a remnant of our rapidly disappearing native game; and

Whereas said lease is unquestionably sought as a means of private gain and will result in destroying its chief attraction and its national value and importance; and

Whereas most of our sister States have protested against said leasing or any other perversion of its chief attraction and its national value and importance; and

Whereas most of our sister States have protested against said leasing or any other perversion of its original purpose: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That our Senators and Representative be requested to use their utmost endeavor to prevent said or any other lease of said National Park, and that we protest against its being allowed to pass from the control of the General Government.

Resolved, That the governor be, and is hereby, requested to forward immediately a copy of these resolutions to each of our members in Congress and to the Secretary of the Interior.

Senate joint resolution No. 8, relative to forfeiture by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of certain land granted in aid of the construction of its railroad, the legal title to which, in order to avoid payment of taxes thereon, it neglects to obtain from the United States, passed February 19, 1883.

Whereas by an act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, amended by an act of Congress July 2, 1864, the Central Pacific Railroad Company was granted certain lands of the United States in aid of constructing its railroad, amounting to about eight millions of acres; and

Whereas four hundred and fifty-two miles of the main track of said railroad company are situate and operated within the State of Nevada, the grants of land in aid of which aggregate over five millions seven hundred and fifty thousand acres; and

Whereas but a very small portion, not to exceed 5 per cent., of this vast amount of land so granted has been selected or sold by the said company or patents thereto applied for; and

Whereas the legal title to the unpatented and unsold portion of said granted lands still remains in the United States, and is not subject to taxation by the State or its county or municipal governments; and

Whereas the value of said granted lands is permanently and continuously enhanced by settlement upon portions thereof sold by said company and by improvements made thereon, and also by purchase and improvement of lands sold by the United States contiguous and adjacent thereto; and

Whereas the lands so granted are exempt from pre-emption and entry as in case of lands of the United States lying within the State of Nevada; and

Whereas the said railroad company, through neglect and failure to have such granted lands surveyed and patented to itself, has since the completion of its said railroad avoided and still continues to avoid the payment of taxes thereon; and

Whereas the said Central Pacific Railroad has been completed and in full operation as part of a main transcontinental line for over thirteen years, during all of which time it has received the protection of the State, county, and municipal governments through whose territory its line extends and under whose jurisdiction its lands so granted are situate, without contributing its equitable proportion to the support of said State, county, and municipal governments, through failure or neglect to obtain title, as aforesaid, to lands granted it by the General Government, and pay its just proportion of taxes thereon, as is demanded and collected of others obtaining lands by purchase or otherwise; and

Whereas a large portion of said granted land is valuable and should be a source of revenue to the State and its local governments: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate and assembly conjointly, That our Senators in Congress be, and hereby are, instructed, and our Representative in Congress be, and hereby is, requested, to use their utmost endeavors to secure the passage of an act compelling the said Central Pacific Railroad Company to forthwith have surveyed and patented to itself the unsold land embraced in the aforesaid grants, under penalty of forfeiting to the United States so much of the said grants as shall remain unsurveyed and the legal title to which shall not be vested in said company within one year from the passage of the act herein urged and demanded; and

Resolved further, That three manuscript copies of this resolution be prepared by the secretary of state and forwarded, duly attested by his excellency the governor, one to each of our Senators and our Representative in Congress, and that five hundred copies of this resolution be ordered printed, and one copy thereof be forwarded by mail to each Senator and Representative now in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. DOLPH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 848) to amend section 2776 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to authorize the unlading of coal, salt, railroad iron, and other like articles in bulk, under the superintendence of customs officers at the expense of parties interested, at places to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury within the collection district; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to state that this proposed amendment of the statutes has been prepared by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury or under his direction. It is intended to provide for practical difficulties which have arisen in regard to the discharge of vessels within the collection district but not within the limits of the port of entry. A day or two since I introduced a bill to extend the limits of the port of Portland as a port of entry, and yesterday the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] introduced a bill to extend the limits of the port of New Orleans as a port of entry. It has been the practice to allow bulky articles, such as coal, railroad iron, pig-iron, and other articles of like nature and bulk, to land without the limits of the port of entry under the supervision of officers of the customs, and at the expense of the parties interested. This bill is intended to give the sanction of the statutes to the custom which has existed. I submit with it a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, and move that the bill and accompanying paper be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. No, sir. I do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] informs the Chair that he intended to call up the resolution submitted by him yesterday but did not do so, understanding that it would be laid before the Senate by the Chair. Therefore the Chair will treat the motion of the Senator from Maine as not having been adopted or made.

Mr. FRYE. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

INDEMNITY RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to call up for consideration the resolution offered by me yesterday, which was ordered to be printed and lie over until to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. Has it been printed?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. VAN WYCK was read, as follows:

Whereas at its December term in the year 1875, in a decision rendered in the case of the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company vs. The United States, the Supreme Court of the United States construed the indemnity clause found in the grant made by Congress in aid of said road, and held that under such a grant indemnity lands are allowed in lieu only of lands originally included in the grant, but which are afterwards sold or disposed of by the United States between the date of the grant and the date when the granted lands became identified by the definite location of the line of the road; and

Whereas on the 5th day of June, 1880, Attorney-General Devens, to whom the question had been referred by Hon. Carl Schurz, then Secretary of the Interior, rendered an opinion, in which, referring to the language of the Supreme Court in the above-named case in regard to the indemnity authorized by grant under consideration, he stated that in the circuit court for the district of Wisconsin, in 1879, Justice Harlan had expressed different views from those announced by the Supreme Court of the United States, and held that under a grant similar to that involved in the case of the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company vs. The United States indemnity lands are allowed in lieu of lands disposed of by the United States either before or after the date of the grant, and therefore advised the Secretary of the Interior to return to the practice which had prevailed in his Department prior to the above-mentioned decision of the Supreme Court, and award indemnity lands to railroad companies in lieu of lands otherwise disposed of by the United States either before or after the dates of their respective grants; and

Whereas Secretary Schurz, on the 16th of October, 1880, accepted the opinion of Attorney-General Devens, and directed the Commissioner of the General Land Office to be governed thereby in the certification of indemnity lands to railroad companies instead of being governed by the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to inform the Senate how much land has been certified or patented for the benefit of railroad companies since the date of the above-named decision of the Supreme Court of the United States as indemnity for lands sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States prior to the dates of the respective grants, and in aid of what roads such patents or certified lists have been issued or are intended to be issued, and that he further inform the Senate whether the order of his predecessor directing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to be governed by the opinion of the Attorney-General and the alleged decision of the United States circuit court for the district of Wisconsin, rather than by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, is still in force in his Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the adoption of the resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I assume that no Senator who has heard the reading of this resolution will desire to be held by the recitals in the preamble; and I hope that before the Senator from Nebraska asks for the information that he requires, and to his having which I presume there can be no objection, he will either definitely inform the Senate as to the accuracy of his recitals or omit them.

I have no objection to the information that is called for being sent to the Senate, but I do not, in the absence of more direct information than I possess at this time, propose to stultify myself by assenting to the very important recitals made in the preliminary paragraphs to the resolution. They affect the decisions of the Supreme Court, the decisions of the Attorney-General, and the action of the Interior Department, about which we have no information whatever, and I most respectfully suggest that it would be exceedingly unwise in the Senate to adopt without further information, as an affirmative act of their own, the declarations that are made in the preamble to the resolution. If the Senator will strip his resolution of the preliminary averments, and ask for the information, specifically setting forth the dates and what he requires, I shall interpose no objection. Otherwise I shall ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, in order to point the resolution and that the Secretary of the Interior may clearly understand what information is desired, the preliminary whereases were inserted. I take it for granted that the facts stated in the preliminaries are more generally known to Senators and to the Department itself than most of the whereases inserted in resolutions proposed in this body. There can be no question on the subject, in the mind of the Senator from Kansas at least, who is so thoroughly conversant with all the branches appertaining to railroad grants. He, I think, will concede the truth of all the averments state.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. I state, then, Mr. President, affirmatively that I have before me the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company against The United States, and that there is in that decision nothing whatever which bears out the allegations contained in the first paragraph of this recital. I shall be glad to have the syllabus of the case read by the Secretary, in order that the discrepancy may appear.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me I will have it read now.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska yields for that purpose.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the syllabus of the case be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

1. Where rights claimed under the United States are set up against it, they must be so clearly defined that there can be no question of the purpose of Congress to confer them.

2. The rule announced in the former decisions of this court, that a grant by the United States is strictly construed against the grantee, applies as well to grants to a State to aid in building railroads as to one granting special privileges to a private corporation.

3. The doctrine in Wilcox vs. Jackson (13 Peters, 498), that a tract lawfully appropriated to any purpose becomes thereafter severed from the mass of public lands, and that no subsequent law or proclamation will be construed to embrace it or to operate upon it, although no exception be made of it, reaffirmed and held to apply with more force to Indian than to military reservations, inasmuch as the latter are the absolute property of the Government, while in the former other rights are vested.

4. Where Congress enacts, "That there be and is hereby granted" to a State, to aid in the construction of a specified railroad, "every alternate section of land, designated by odd numbers," within certain limits of each side of the road, the State takes an immediate interest in land so situate, whereto the complete title is in the United States at the date of the act, although a survey of the land and a location of the road are necessary to give precision to the title and attach it to any particular tract. Such a grant is applicable only to public land owned absolutely by the United States. No other is subject to survey and division into such sections.

5. Where the right of an Indian tribe to the possession and use of certain lands, as long as it may choose to occupy the same, is assured by treaty, a grant of them, absolutely or cum onere, by Congress, to aid in building a railroad, violates an express stipulation; and a grant in general terms of "land" can not be construed to embrace them.

6. A proviso, that any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States, for any purpose whatever, are reserved from the operation of the grant to which it is annexed, applies to lands set apart for the use of any Indian tribe under a treaty. They are reserved to the United States for that specific use; and, if so reserved at the date of the grant, are excluded from its operation. It is immaterial whether they subsequently become a part of the public lands of the country.

7. The act of March 3, 1863 (12 Stat., 772), to aid in the construction of certain railroads in Kansas, embraces no part of the lands reserved to the Great and Little Osages by the treaty of June 2, 1825 (7 Stat., 240); and the treaty concluded September 29, 1865, and proclaimed January 21, 1867 (14 Stat., 687), neither makes nor recognizes a grant of such lands. The effect of the treaty is simply to provide that any rights of the companies designated by the State to build the roads should not be barred or impaired by reason of the general terms of the treaty, but not to declare that such rights existed.
